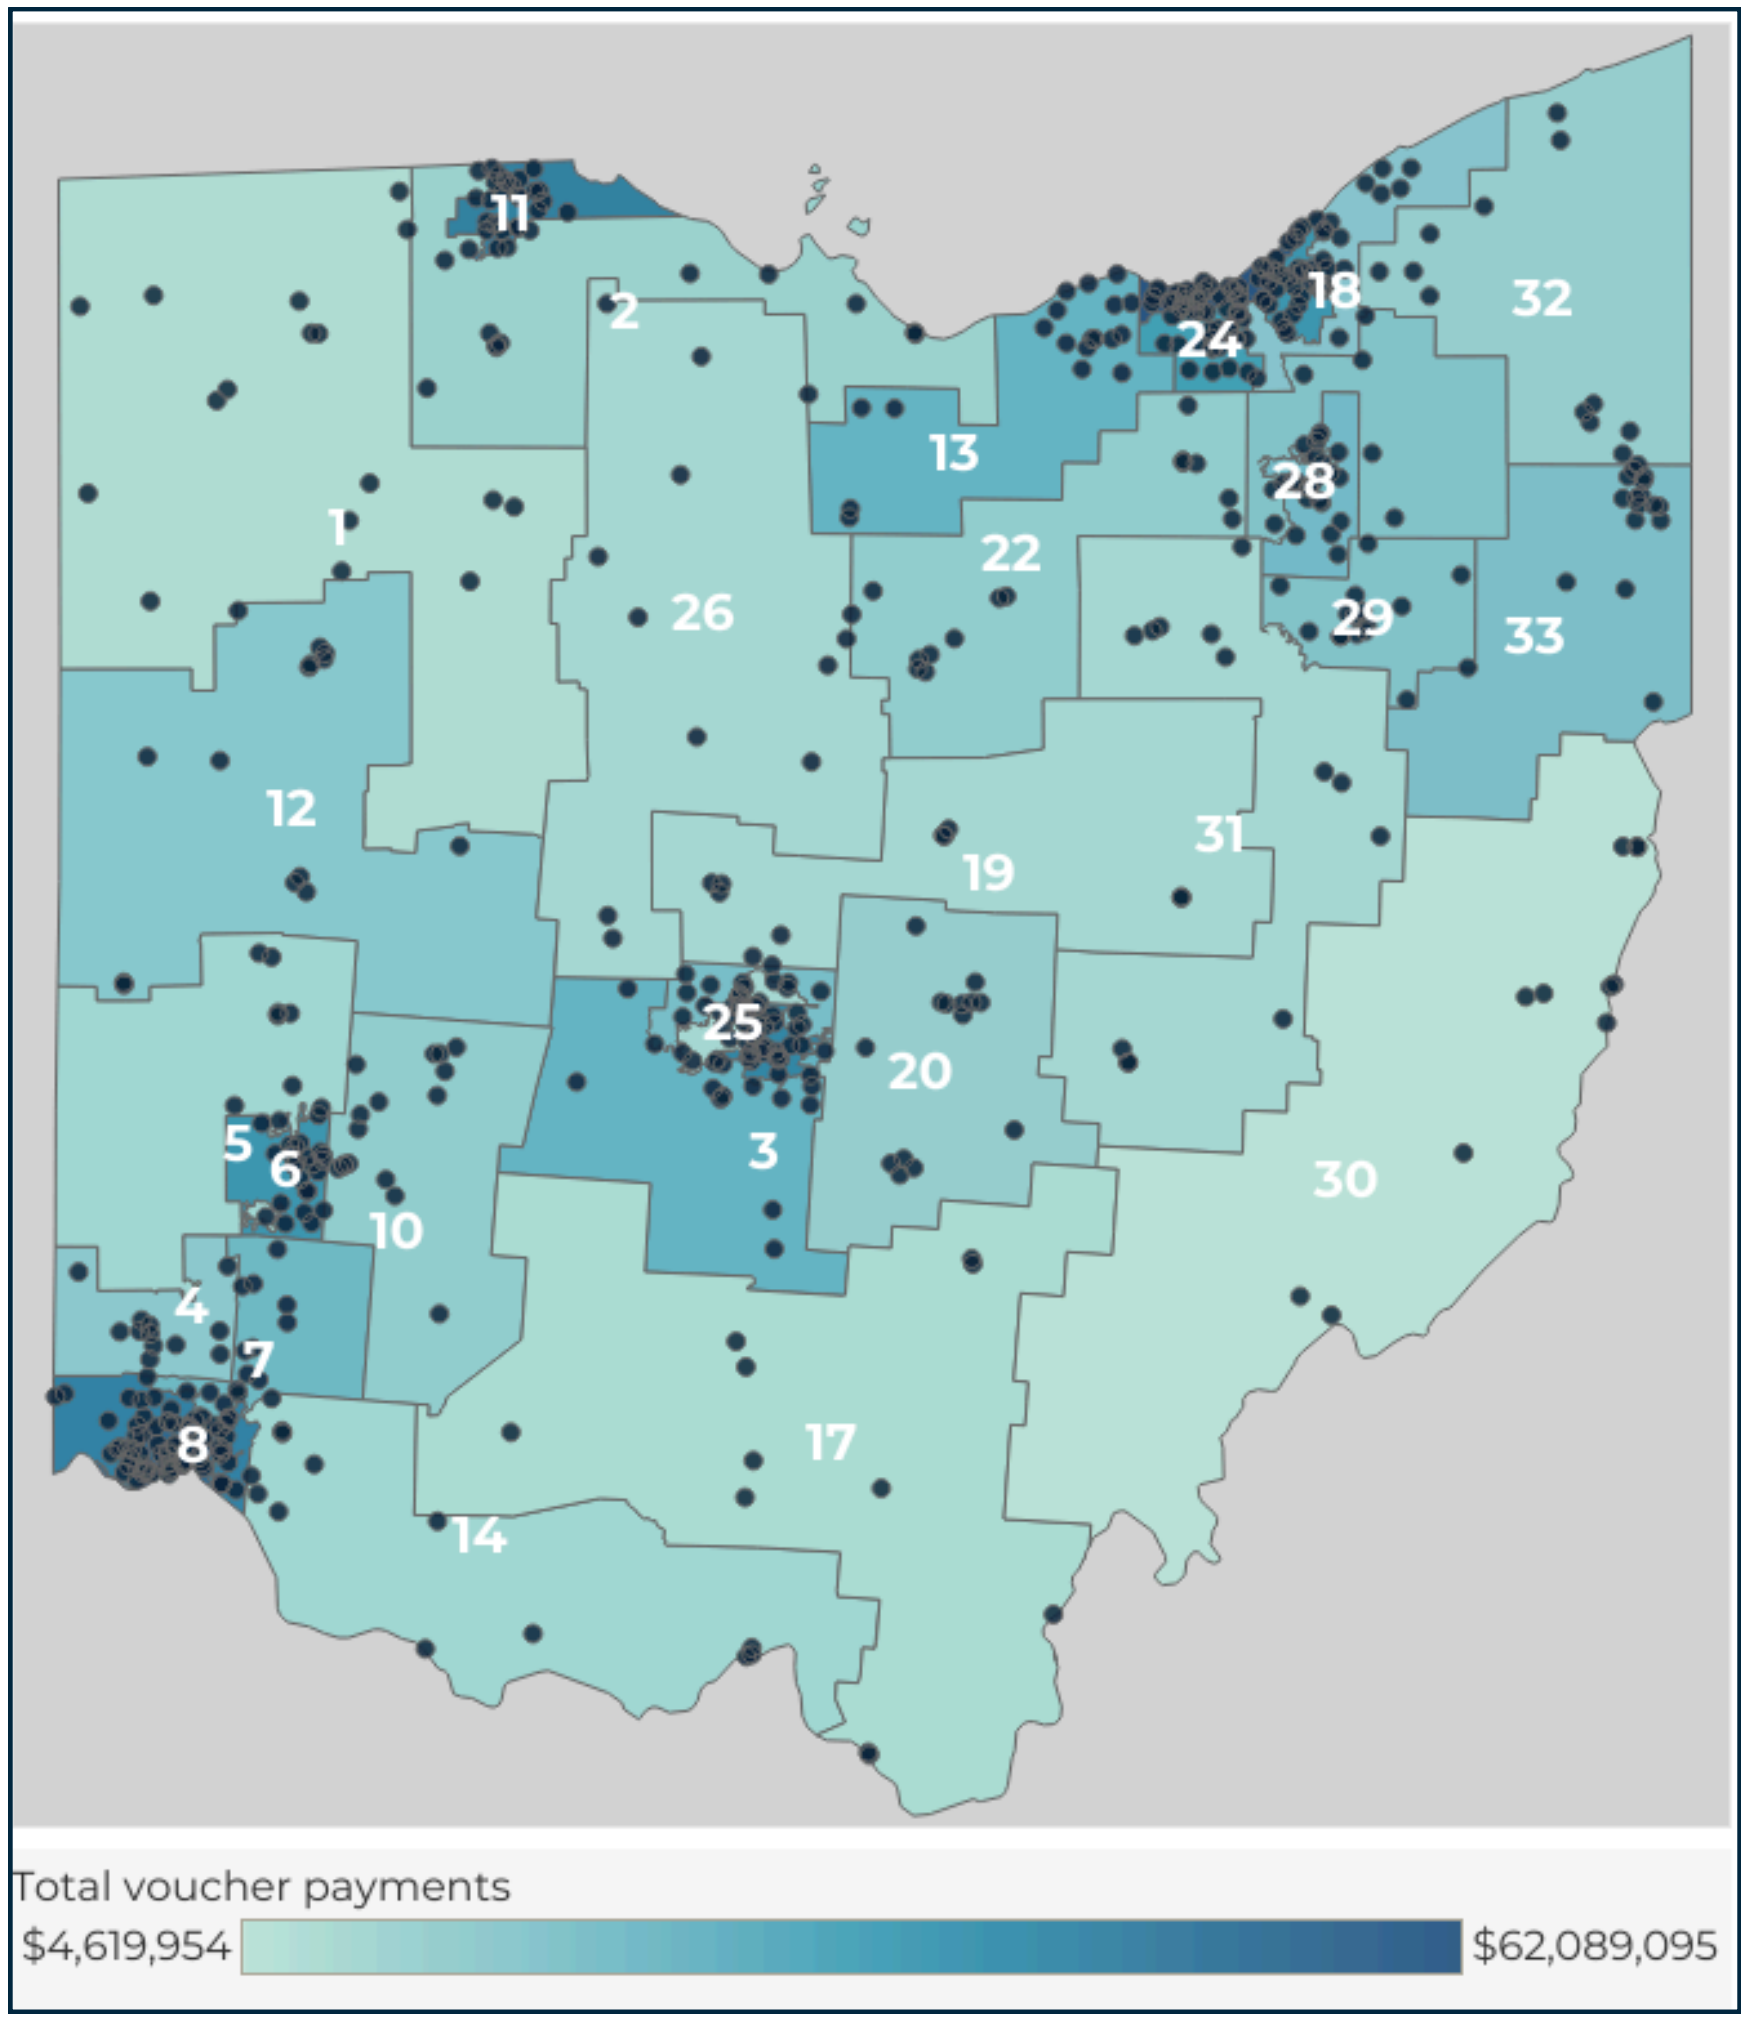

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 1

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 1 there are

17

private voucher schools attended by 1,588

voucher students.

In District 1 there are 154 public schools attended by 52,476

students.

Contact Senator McColley and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

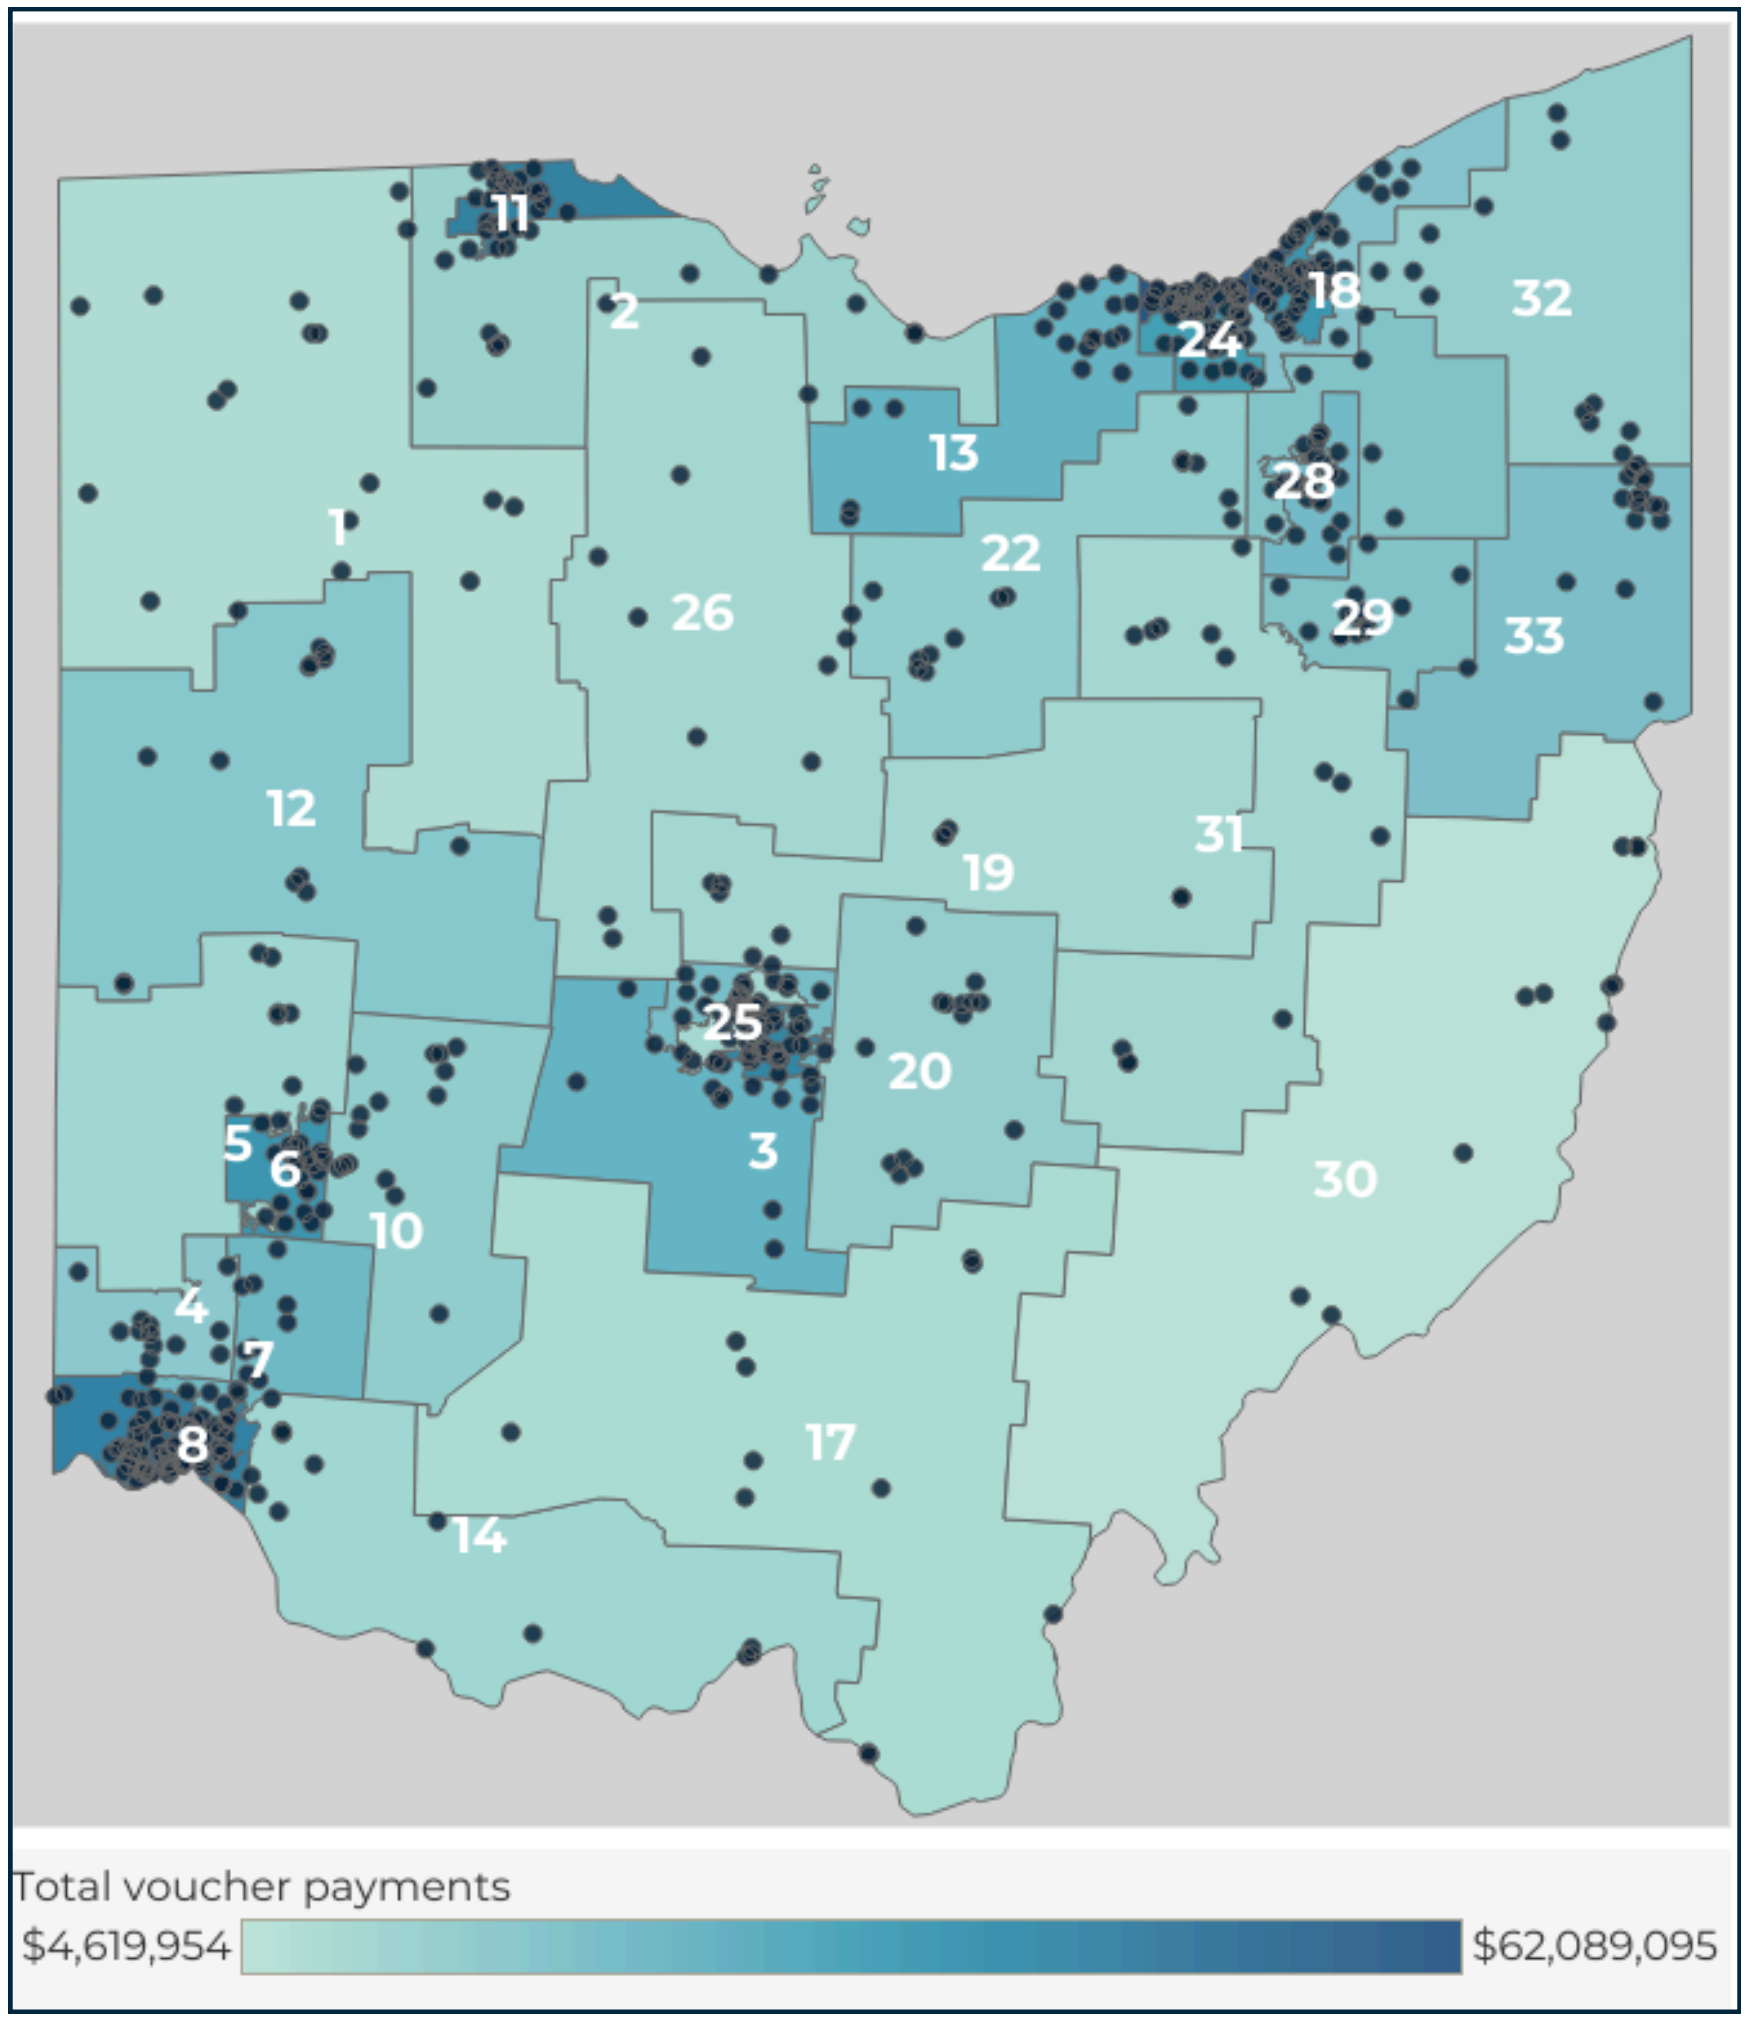

Email them at mccolley@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8150

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 10

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 10 there are

16

private voucher schools attended by

2,644

voucher students.

In District 10 there are

82

public schools attended by

44,022

students.

Contact Senator Koehler and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

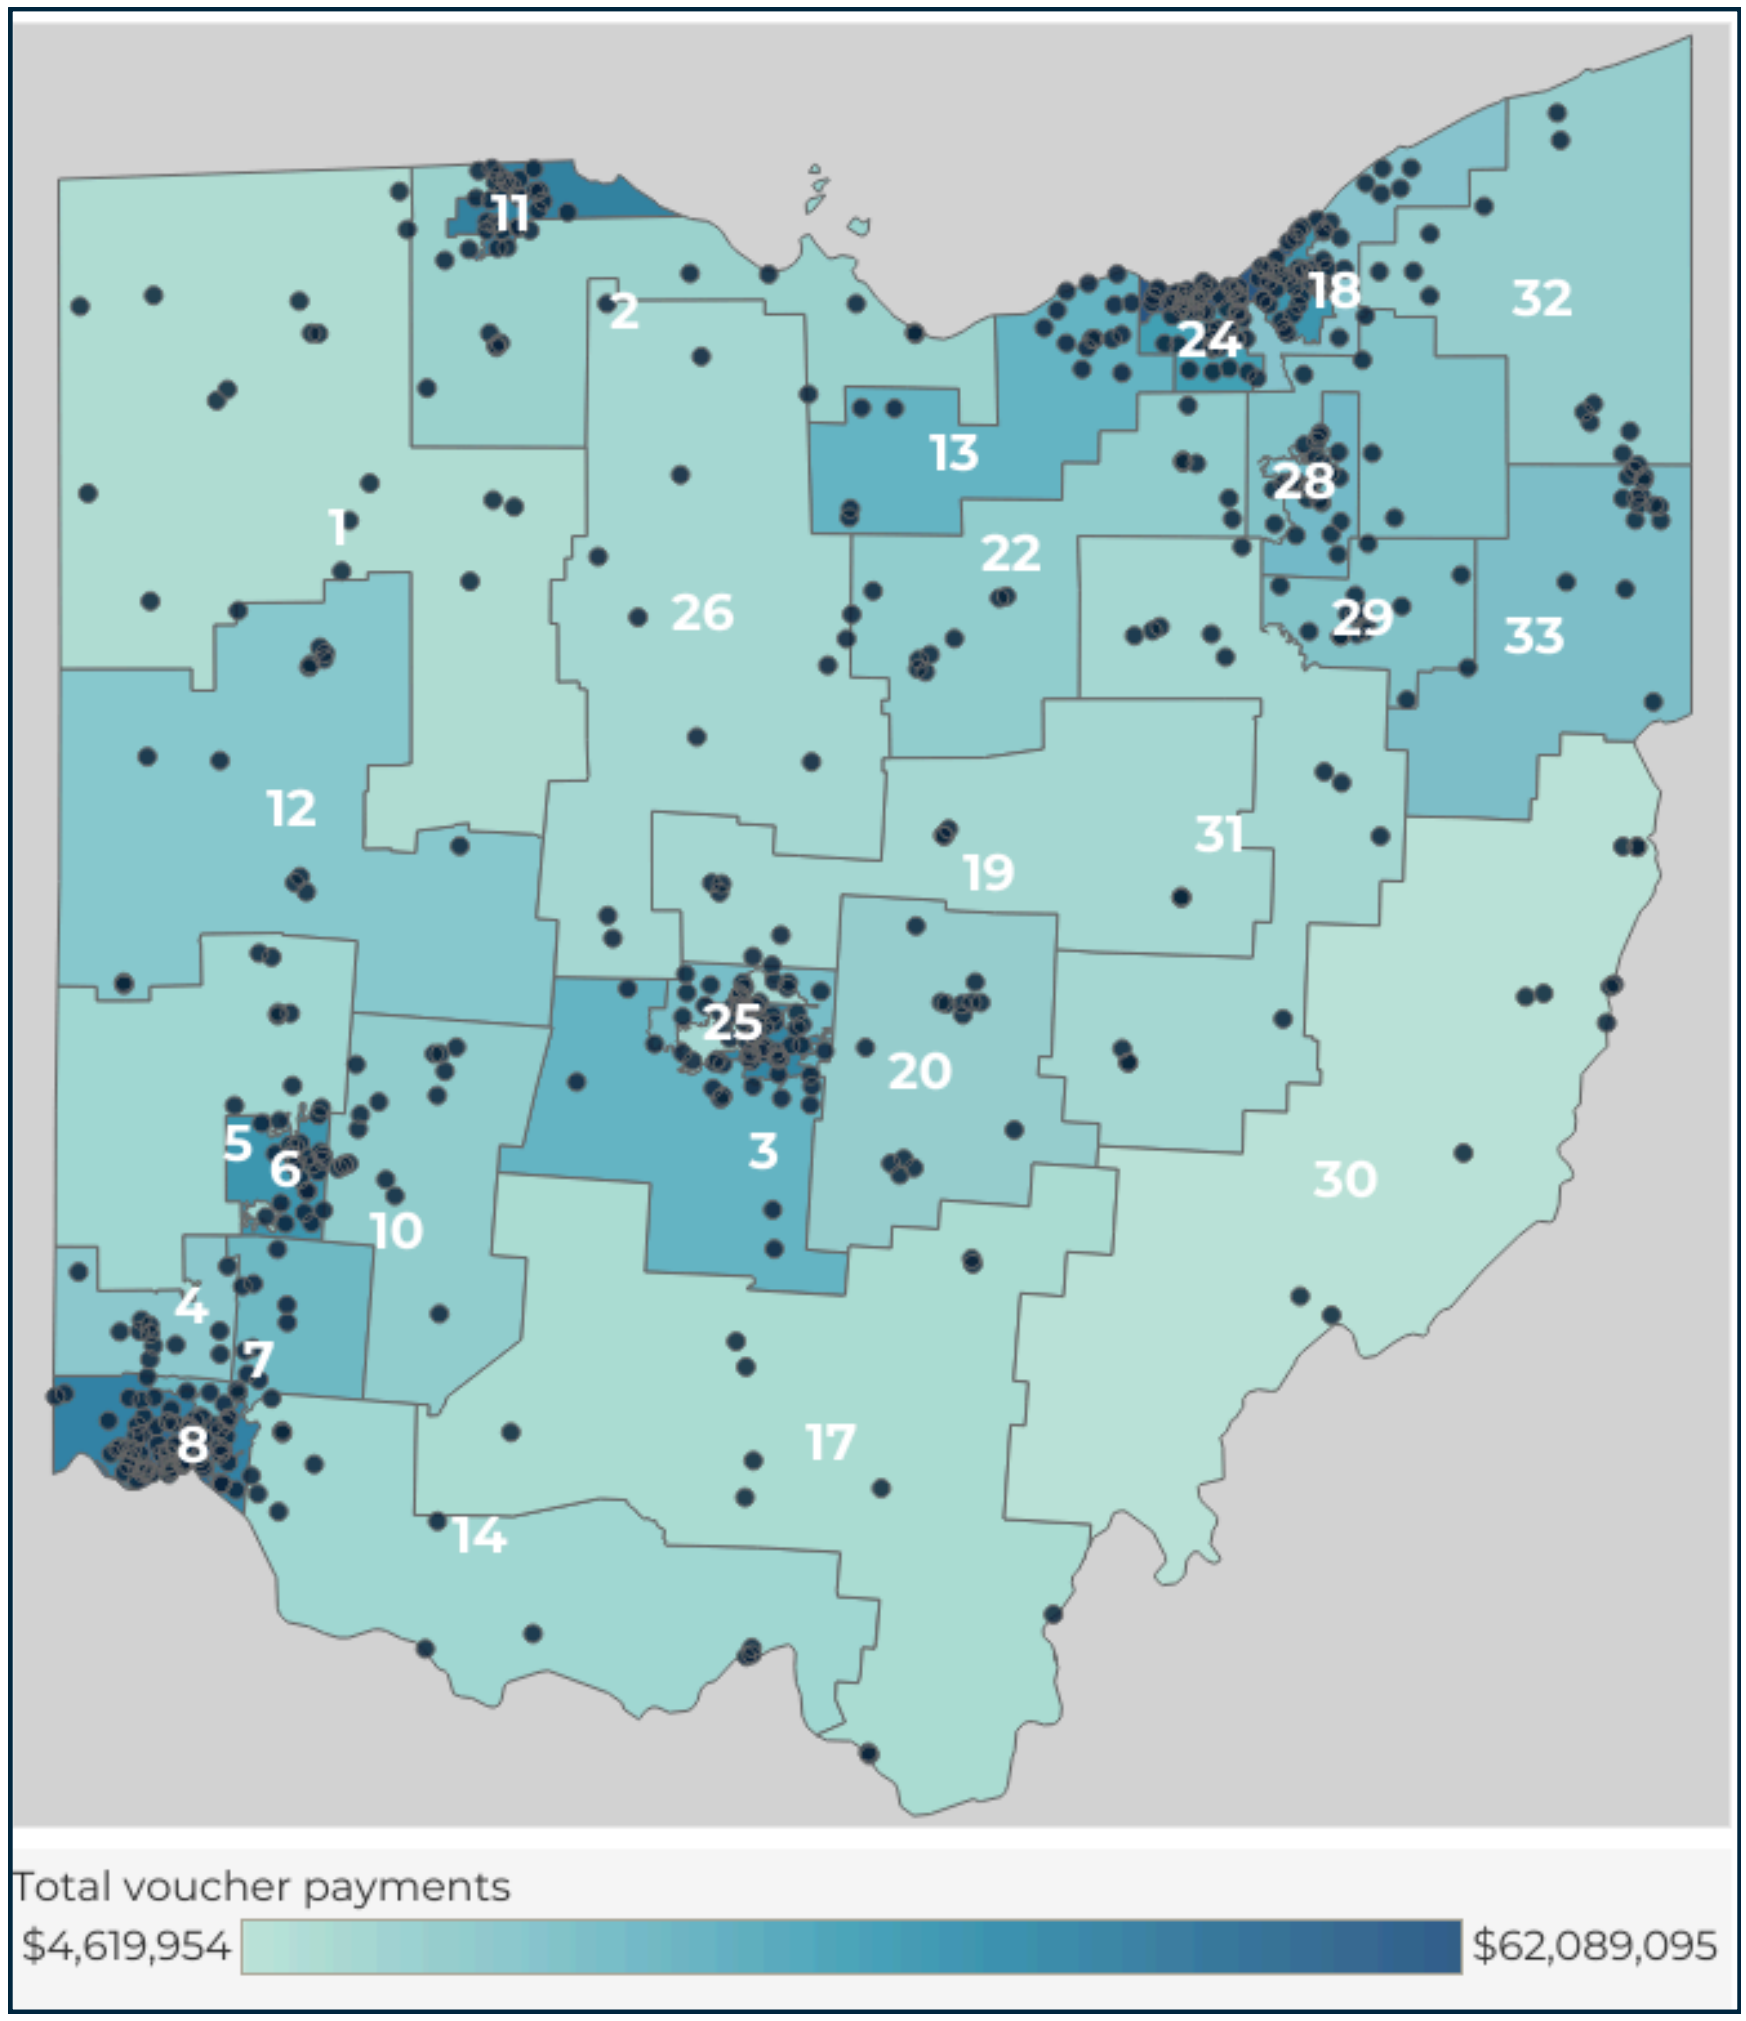

Email them at koehler@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-3780

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 11

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 11 there are

25

private voucher schools attended by 7,702

voucher students.

In District 11 there are

84

public schools attended by 36,255

students.

Contact Senator Hicks-Hudson and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

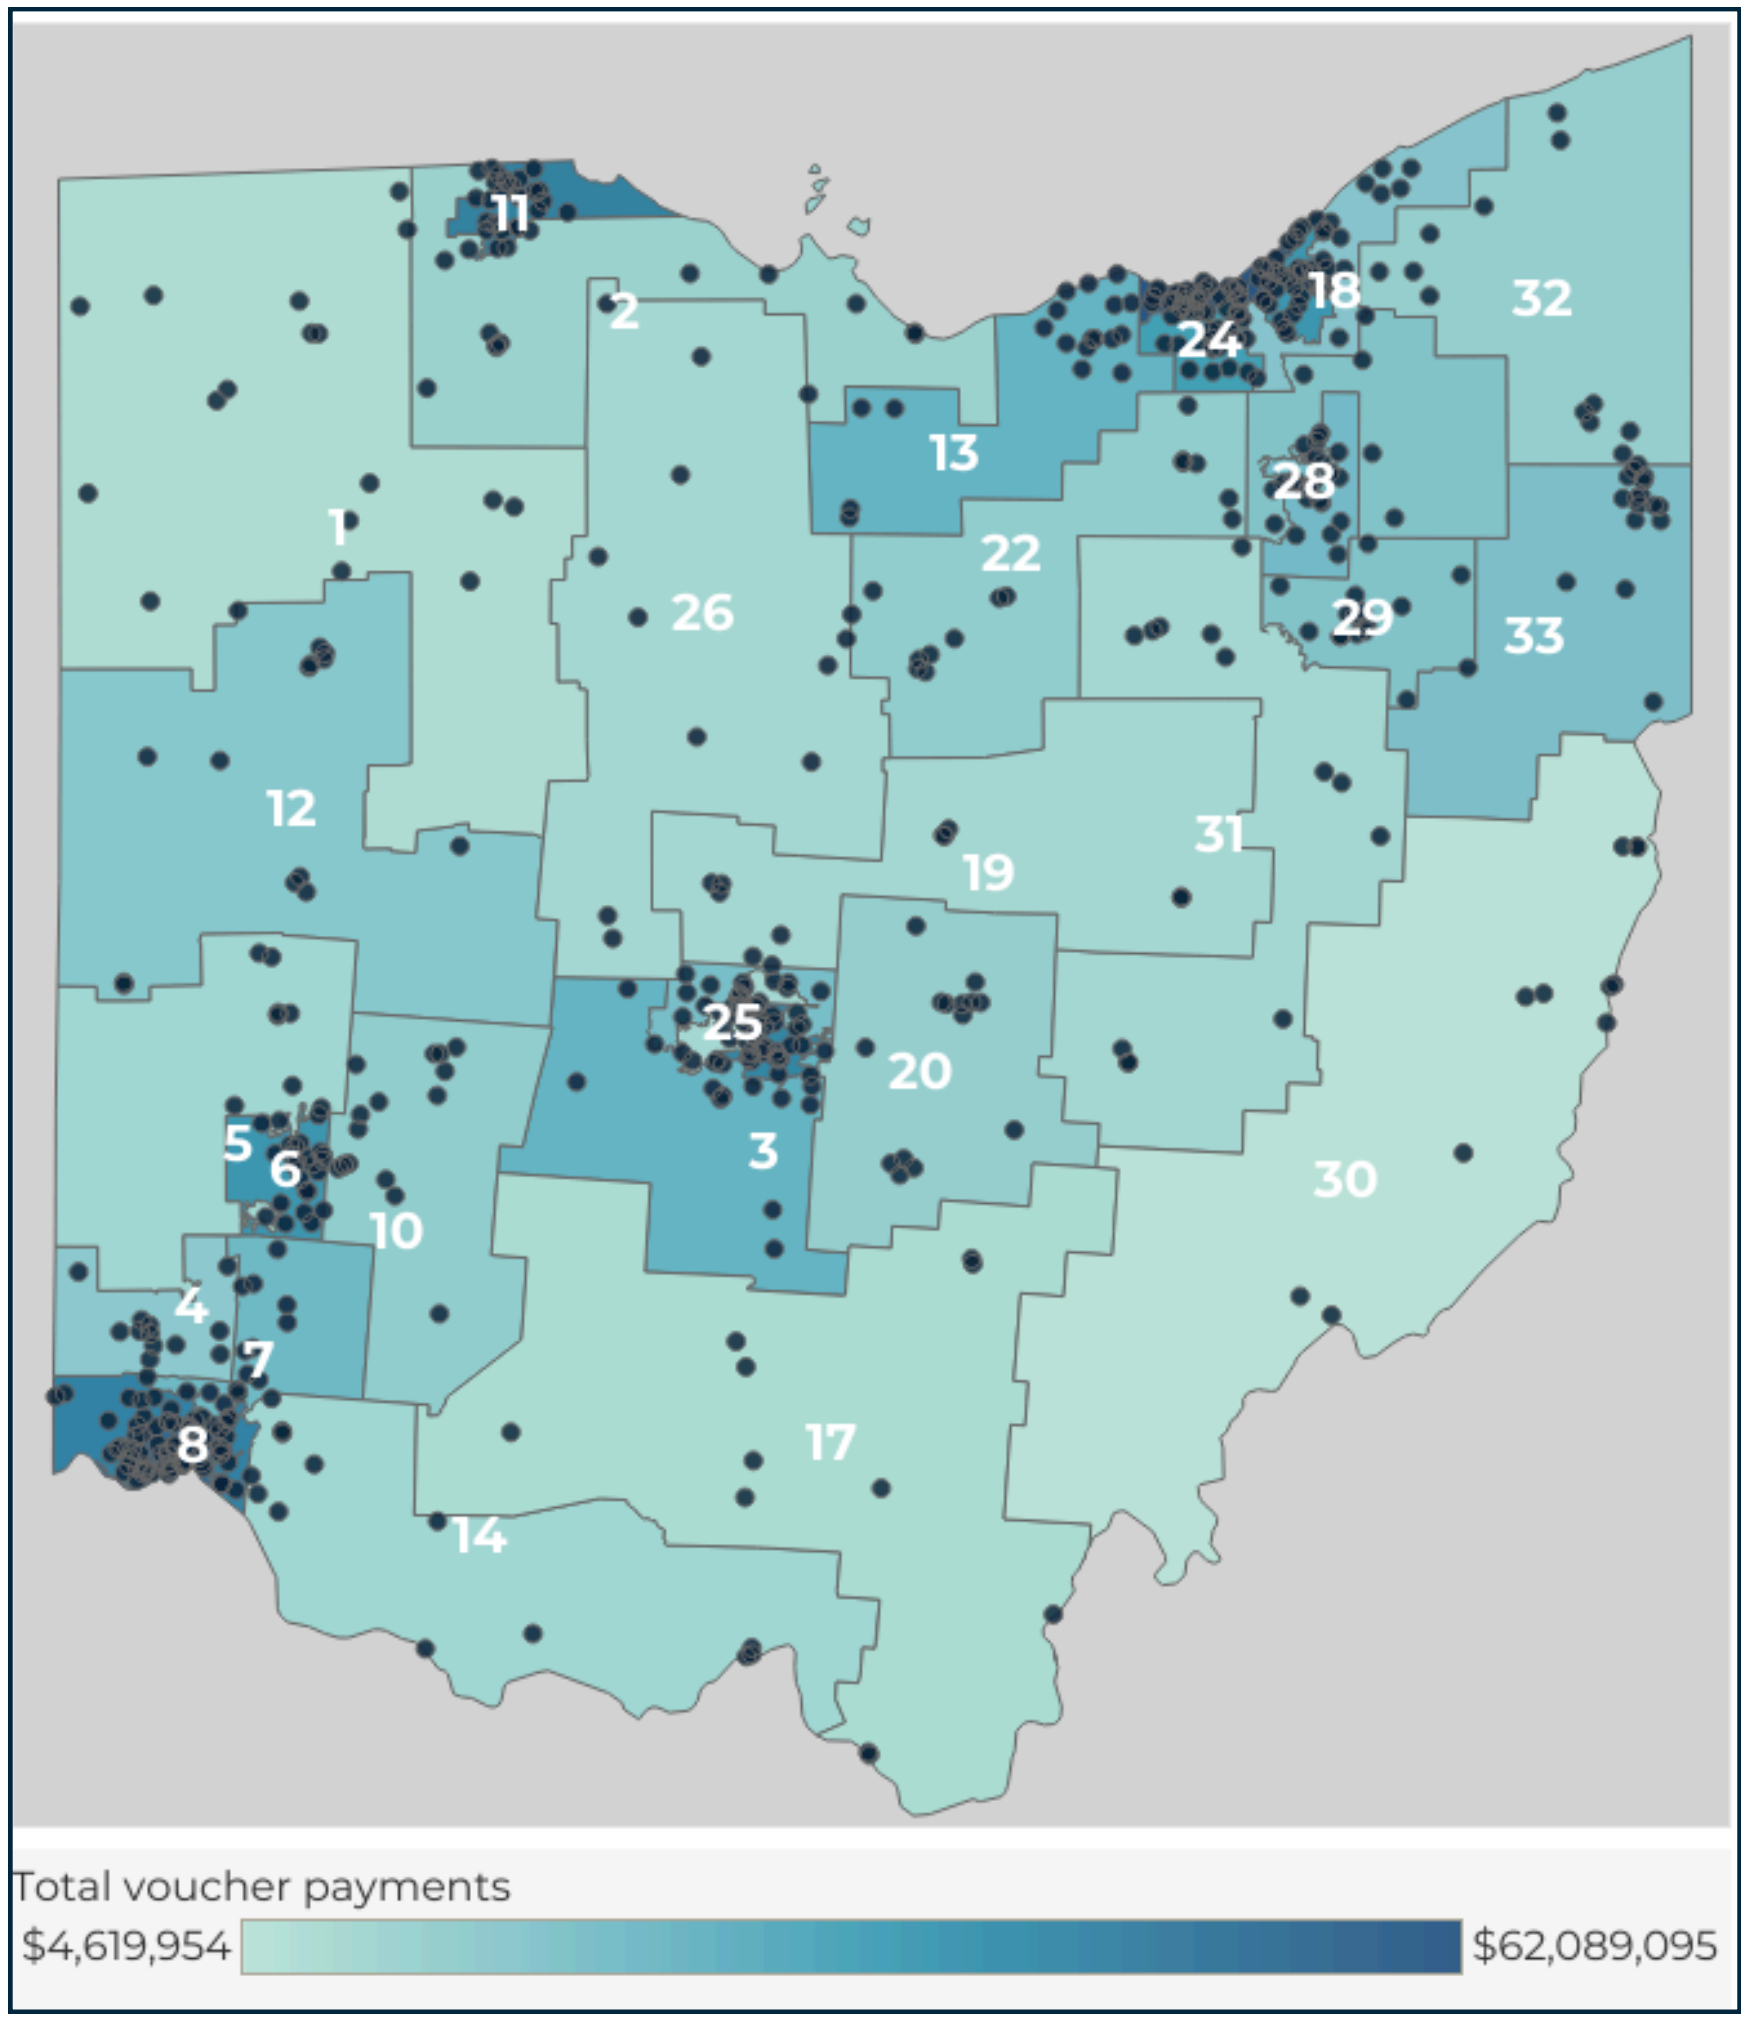

Email them at hicks-hudson@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-5204

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 12

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 12 there are

14

private voucher schools attended by

2,875

voucher students.

In District 12 there are 124

public schools attended by 50,397

students.

Contact Senator Manchester and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

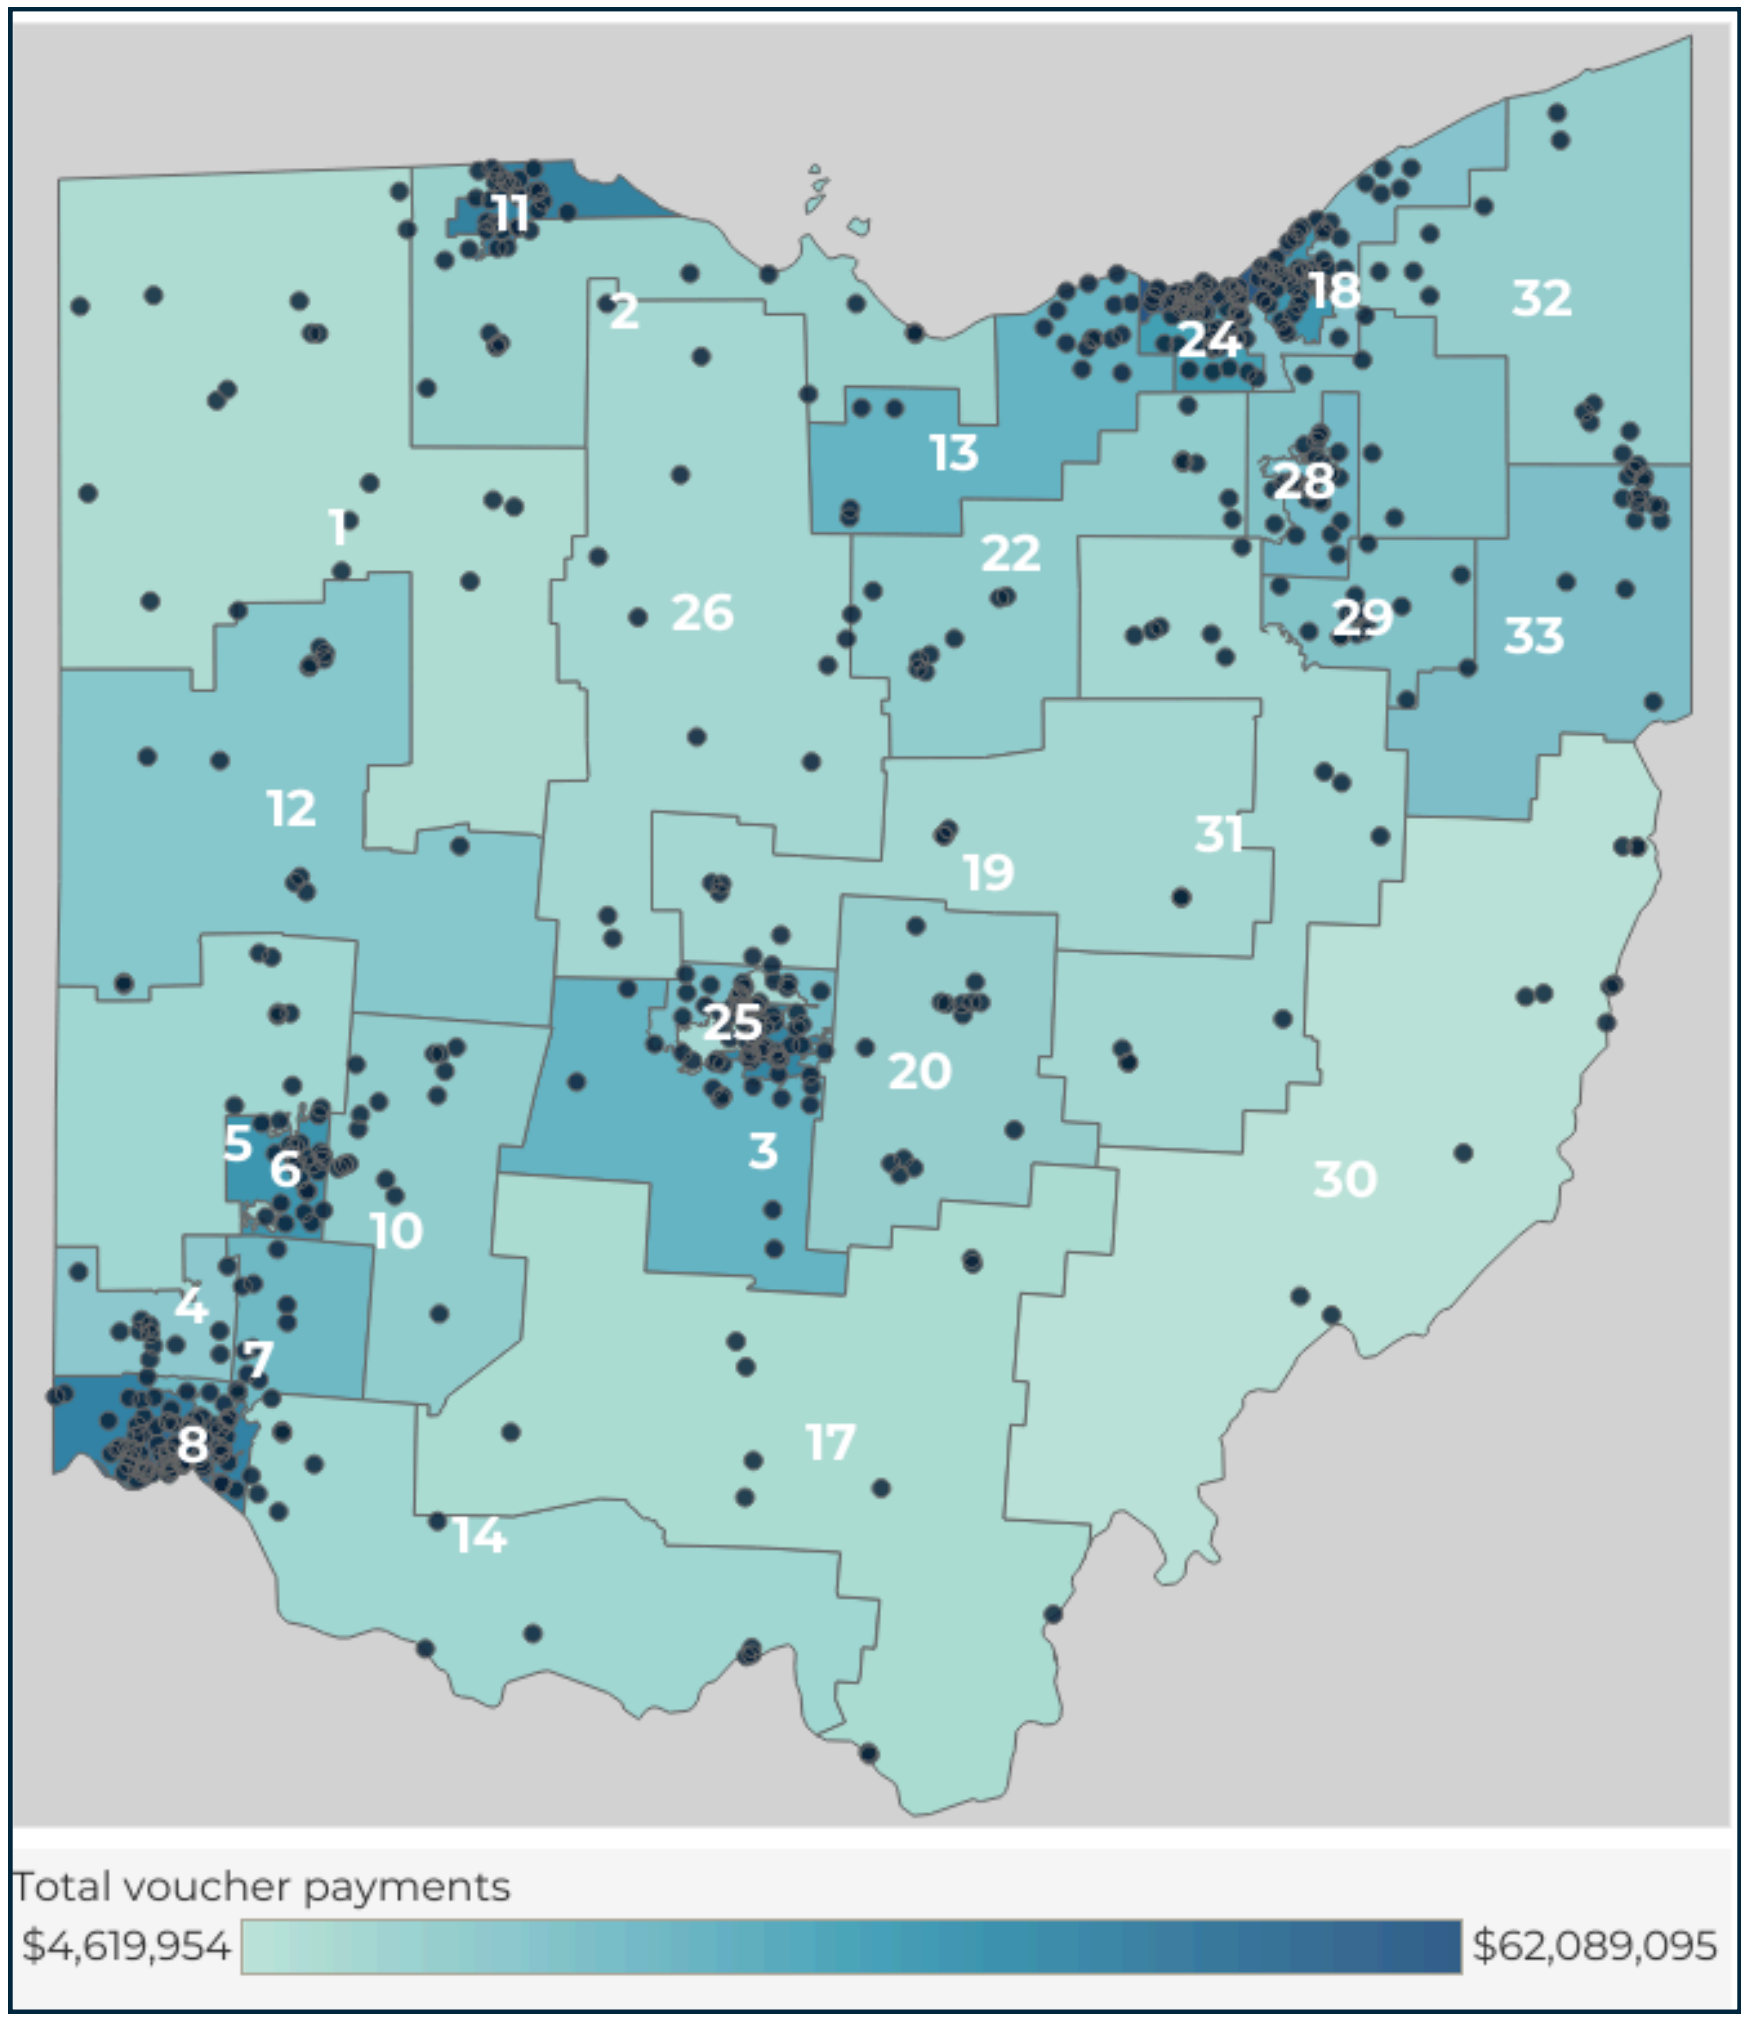

Email them at manchester@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-7584

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 13

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 13 there are

19

private voucher schools attended by 4,977

voucher students.

In District 13 there are

95

public schools attended by

44,297

students.

Contact Senator Manning and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

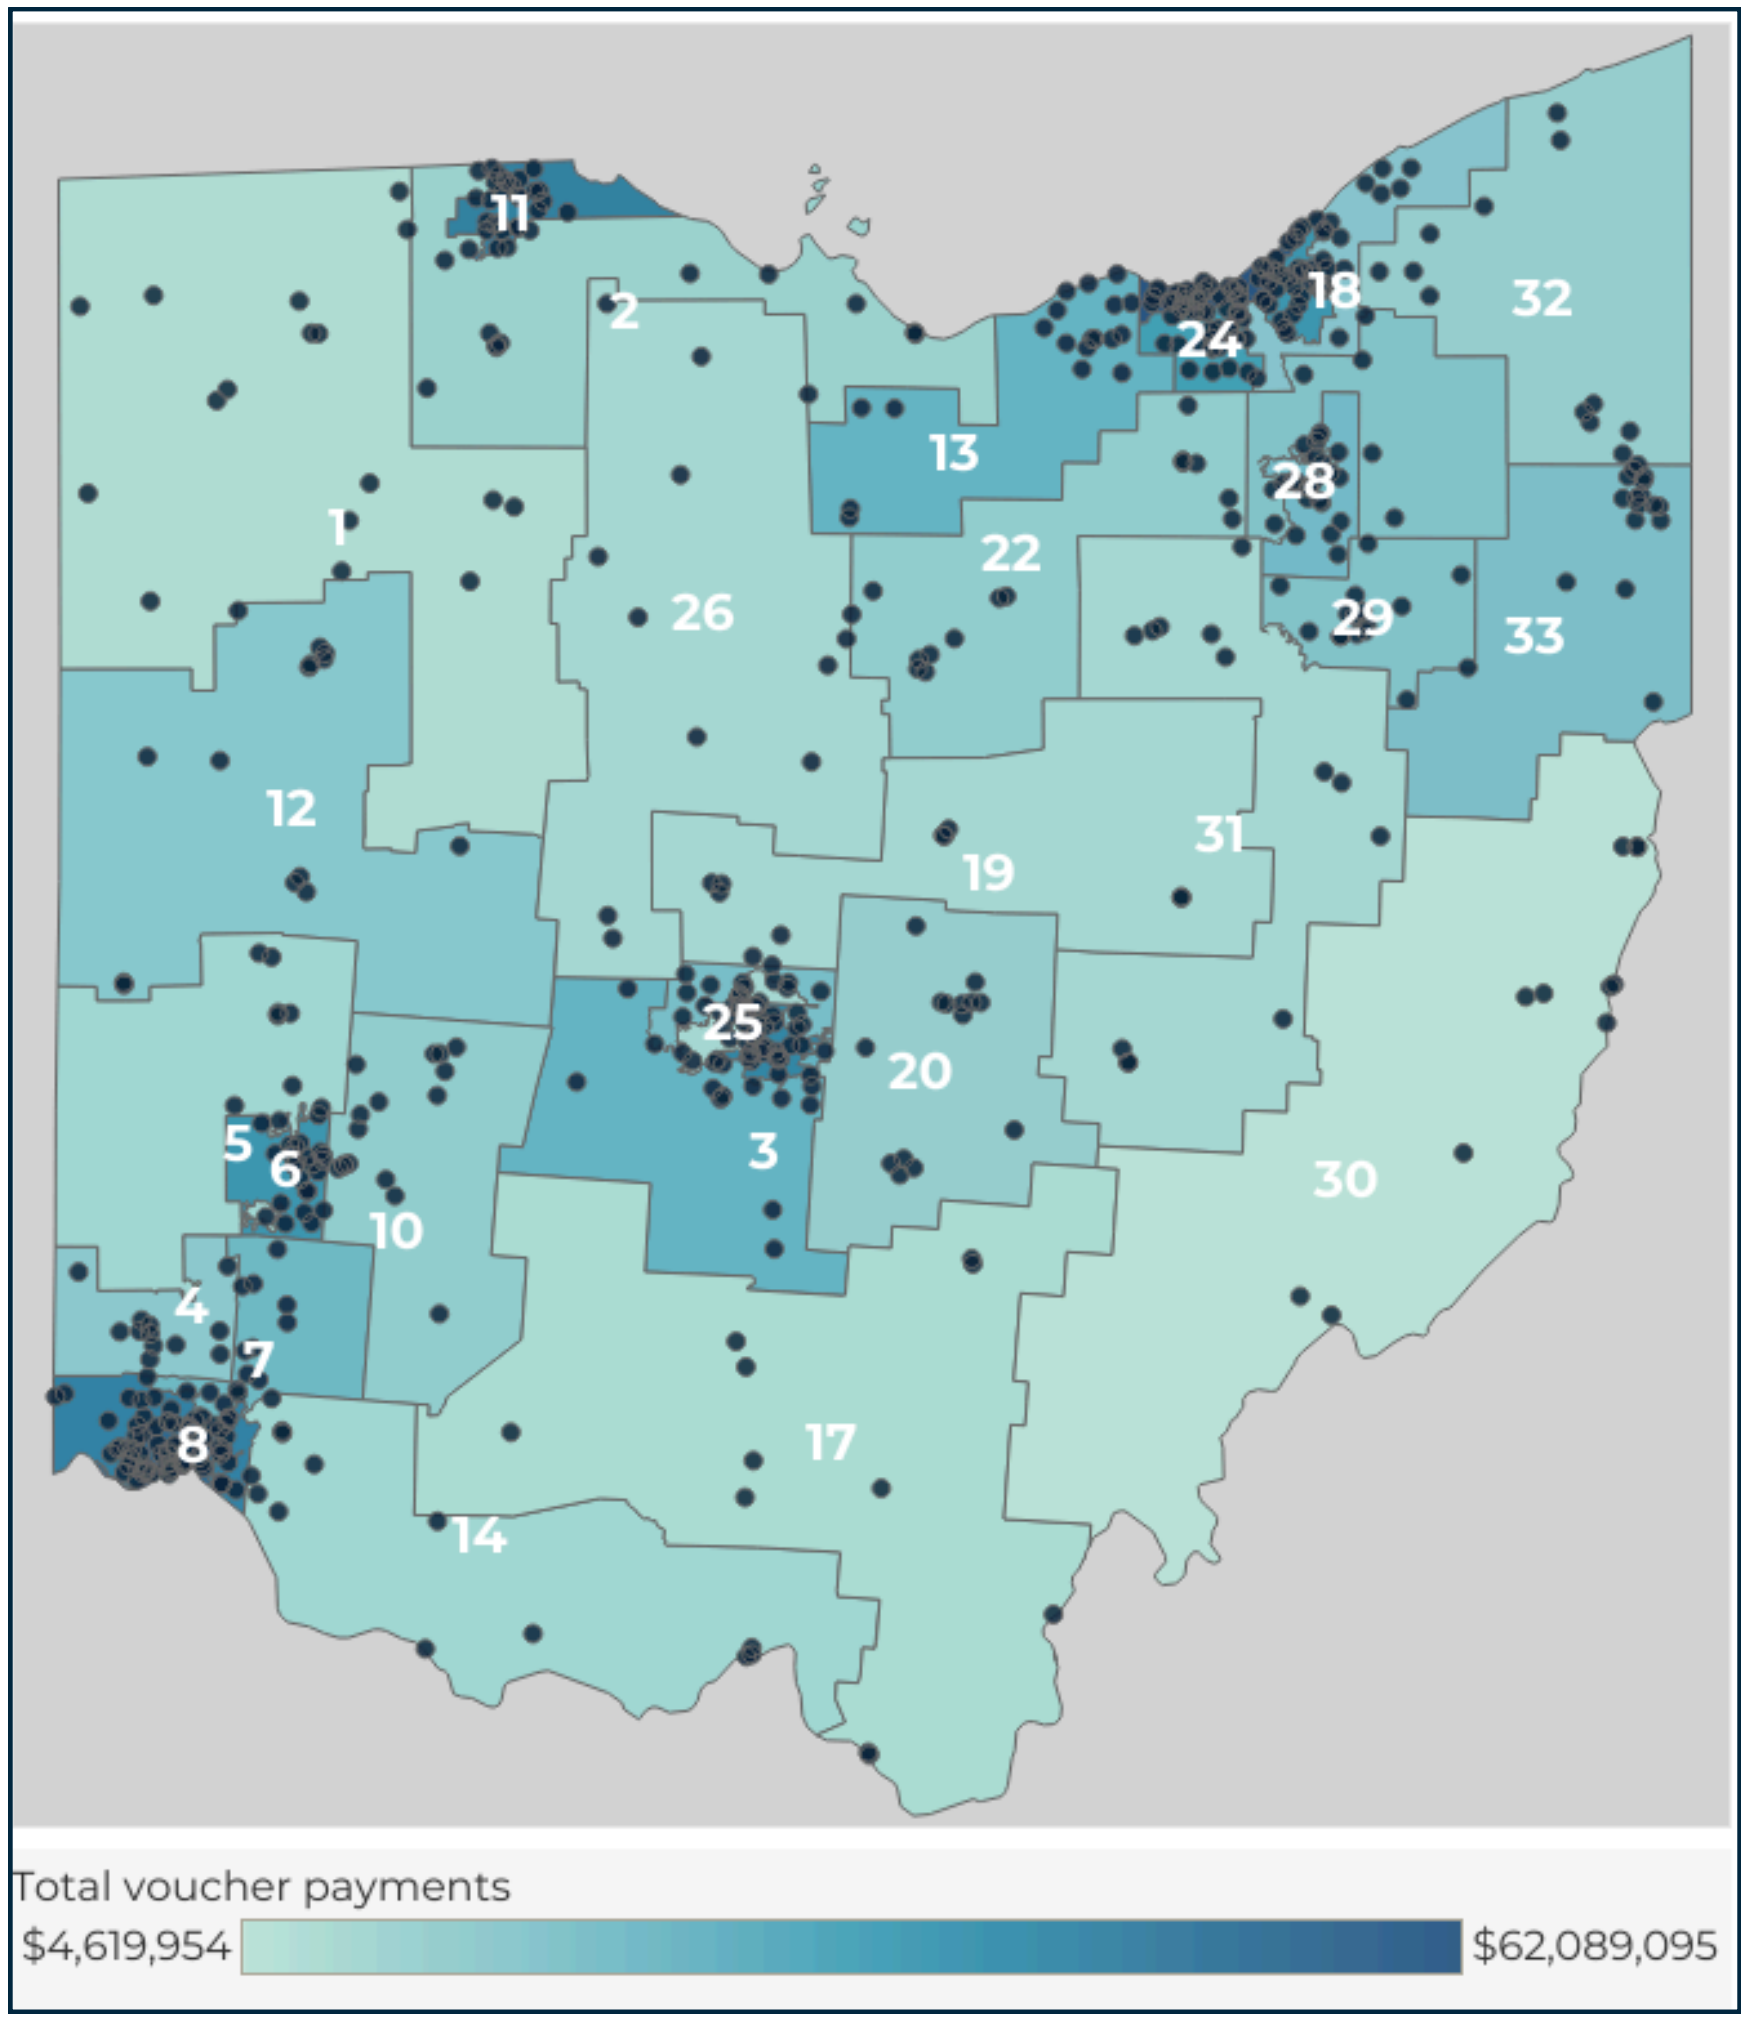

Email them at manning@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-644-7613

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 14

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 14 there are

13

private voucher schools attended by

2,248

voucher students.

In District 14 there are

95

public schools attended by

44,908

students.

Contact Senator Johnson and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

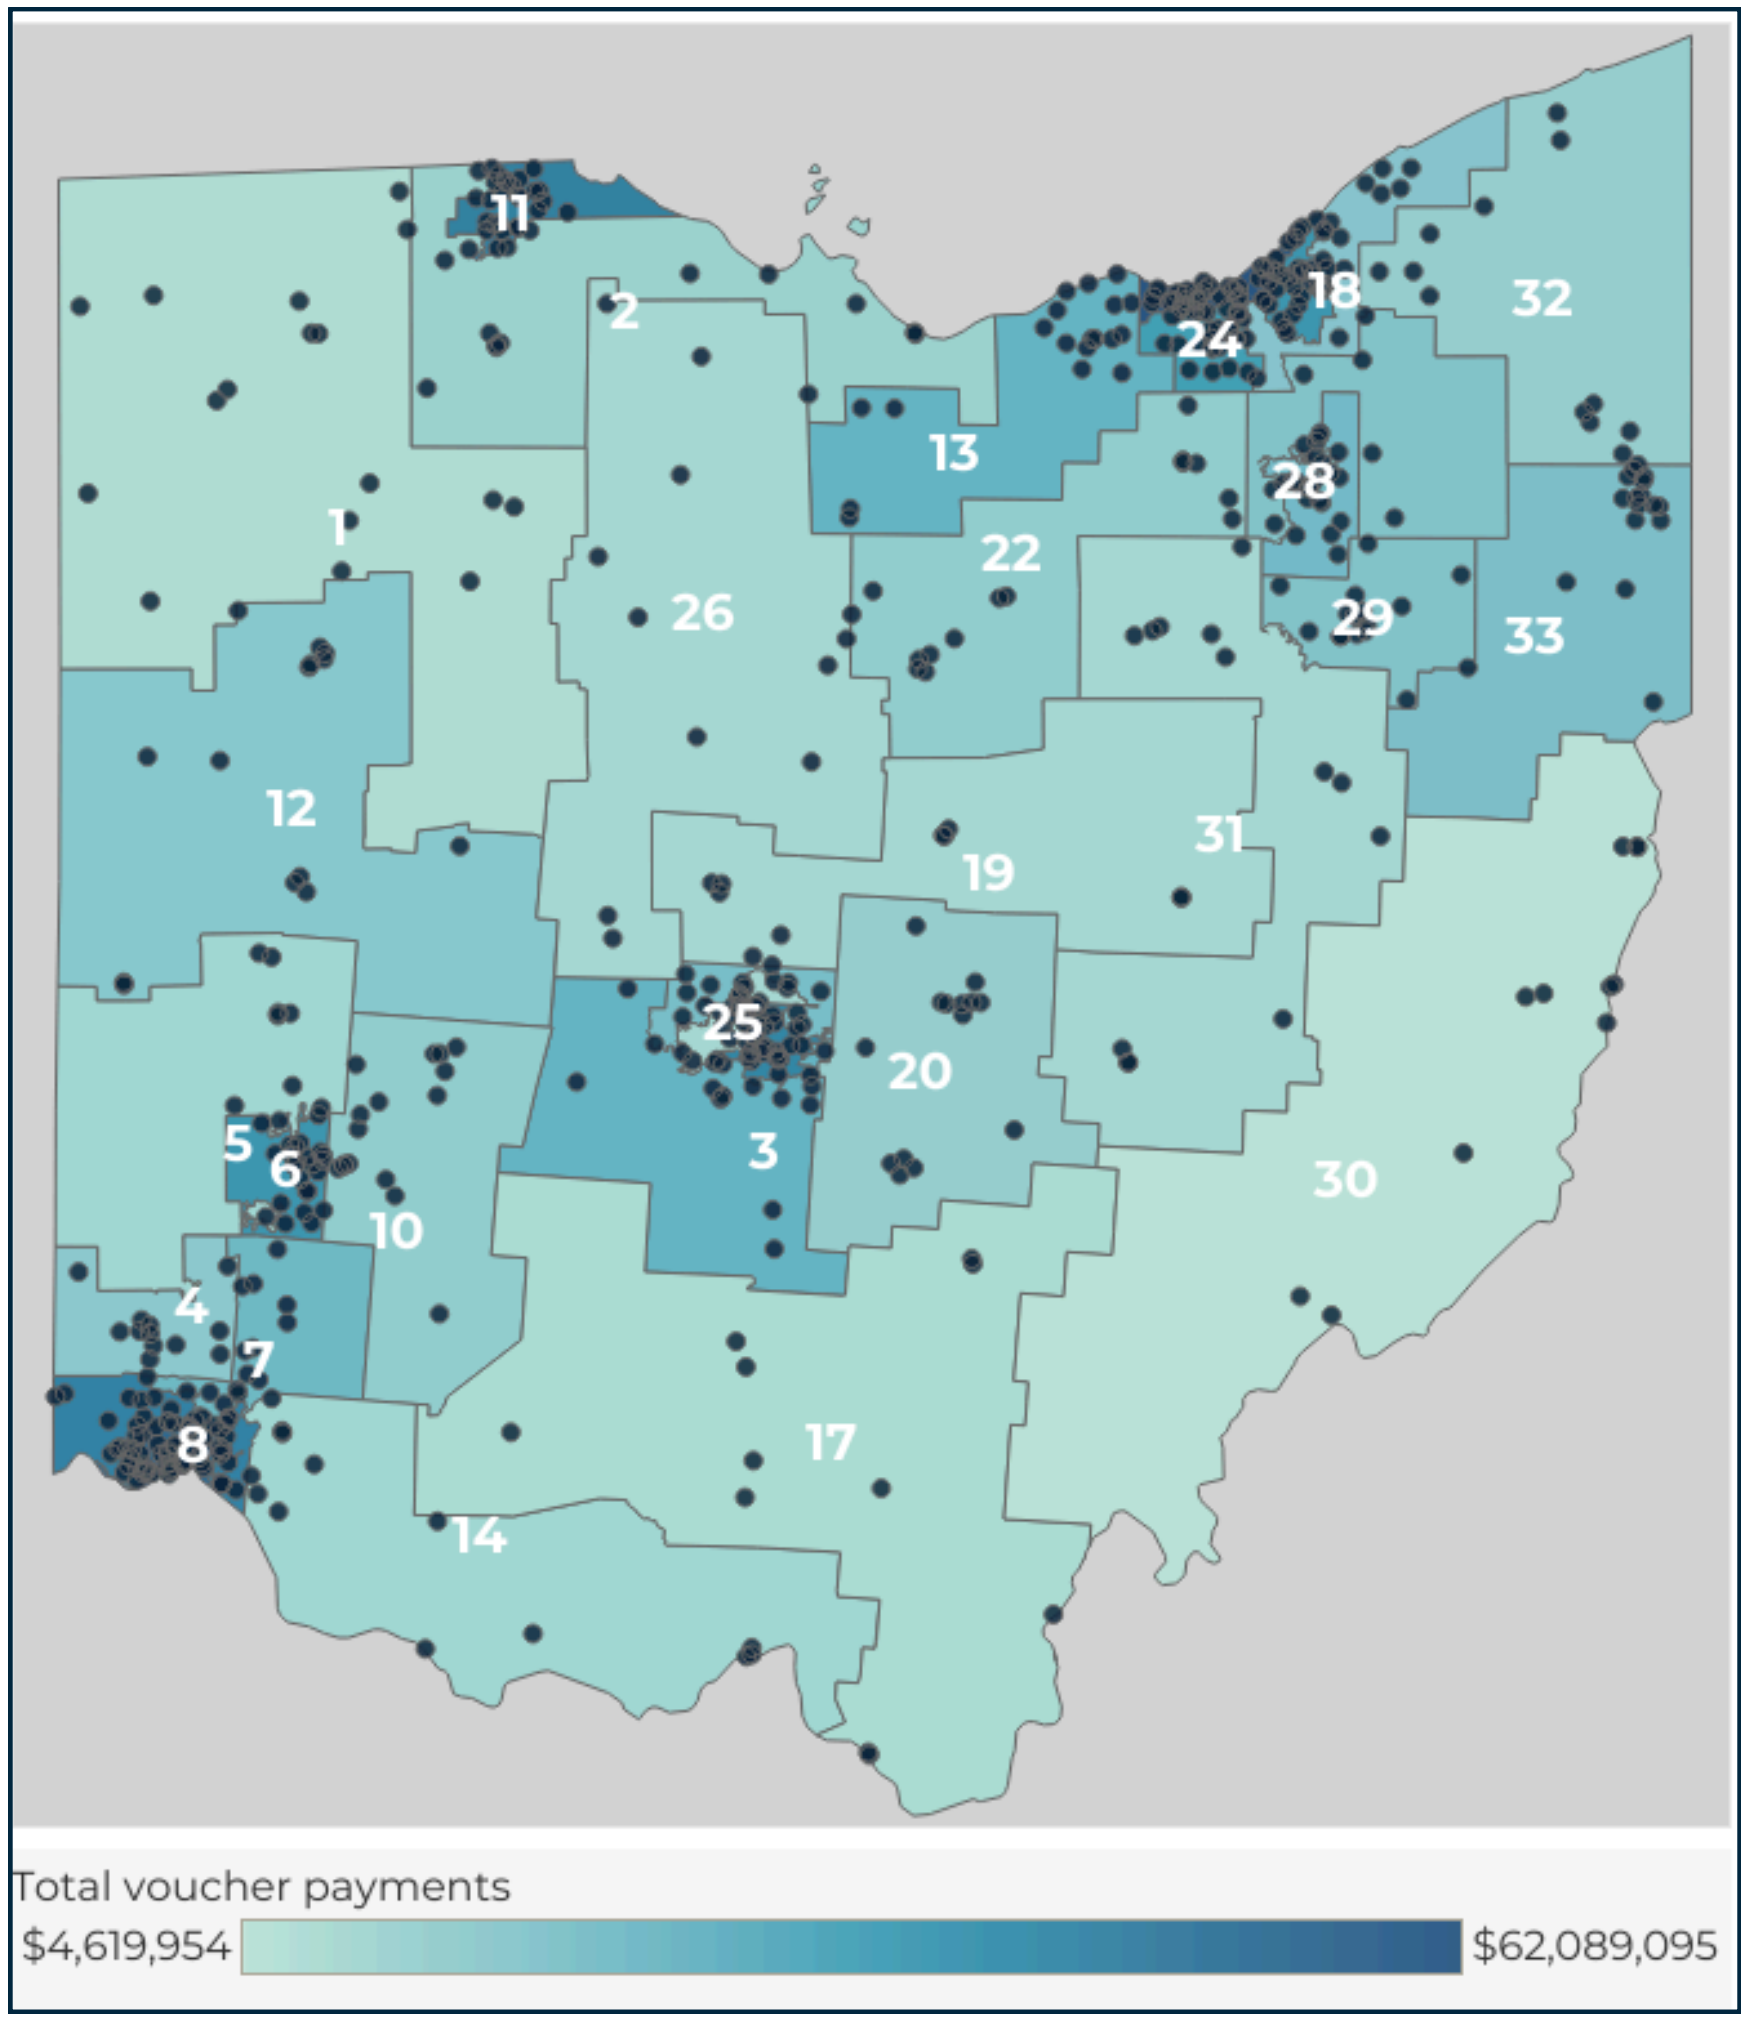

Email them at johnson@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8082

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 15

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 15 there are

27 private voucher schools attended by 7,199

voucher students.

In District 15 there are

76

public schools attended by

29,999

students.

Contact Senator Craig and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

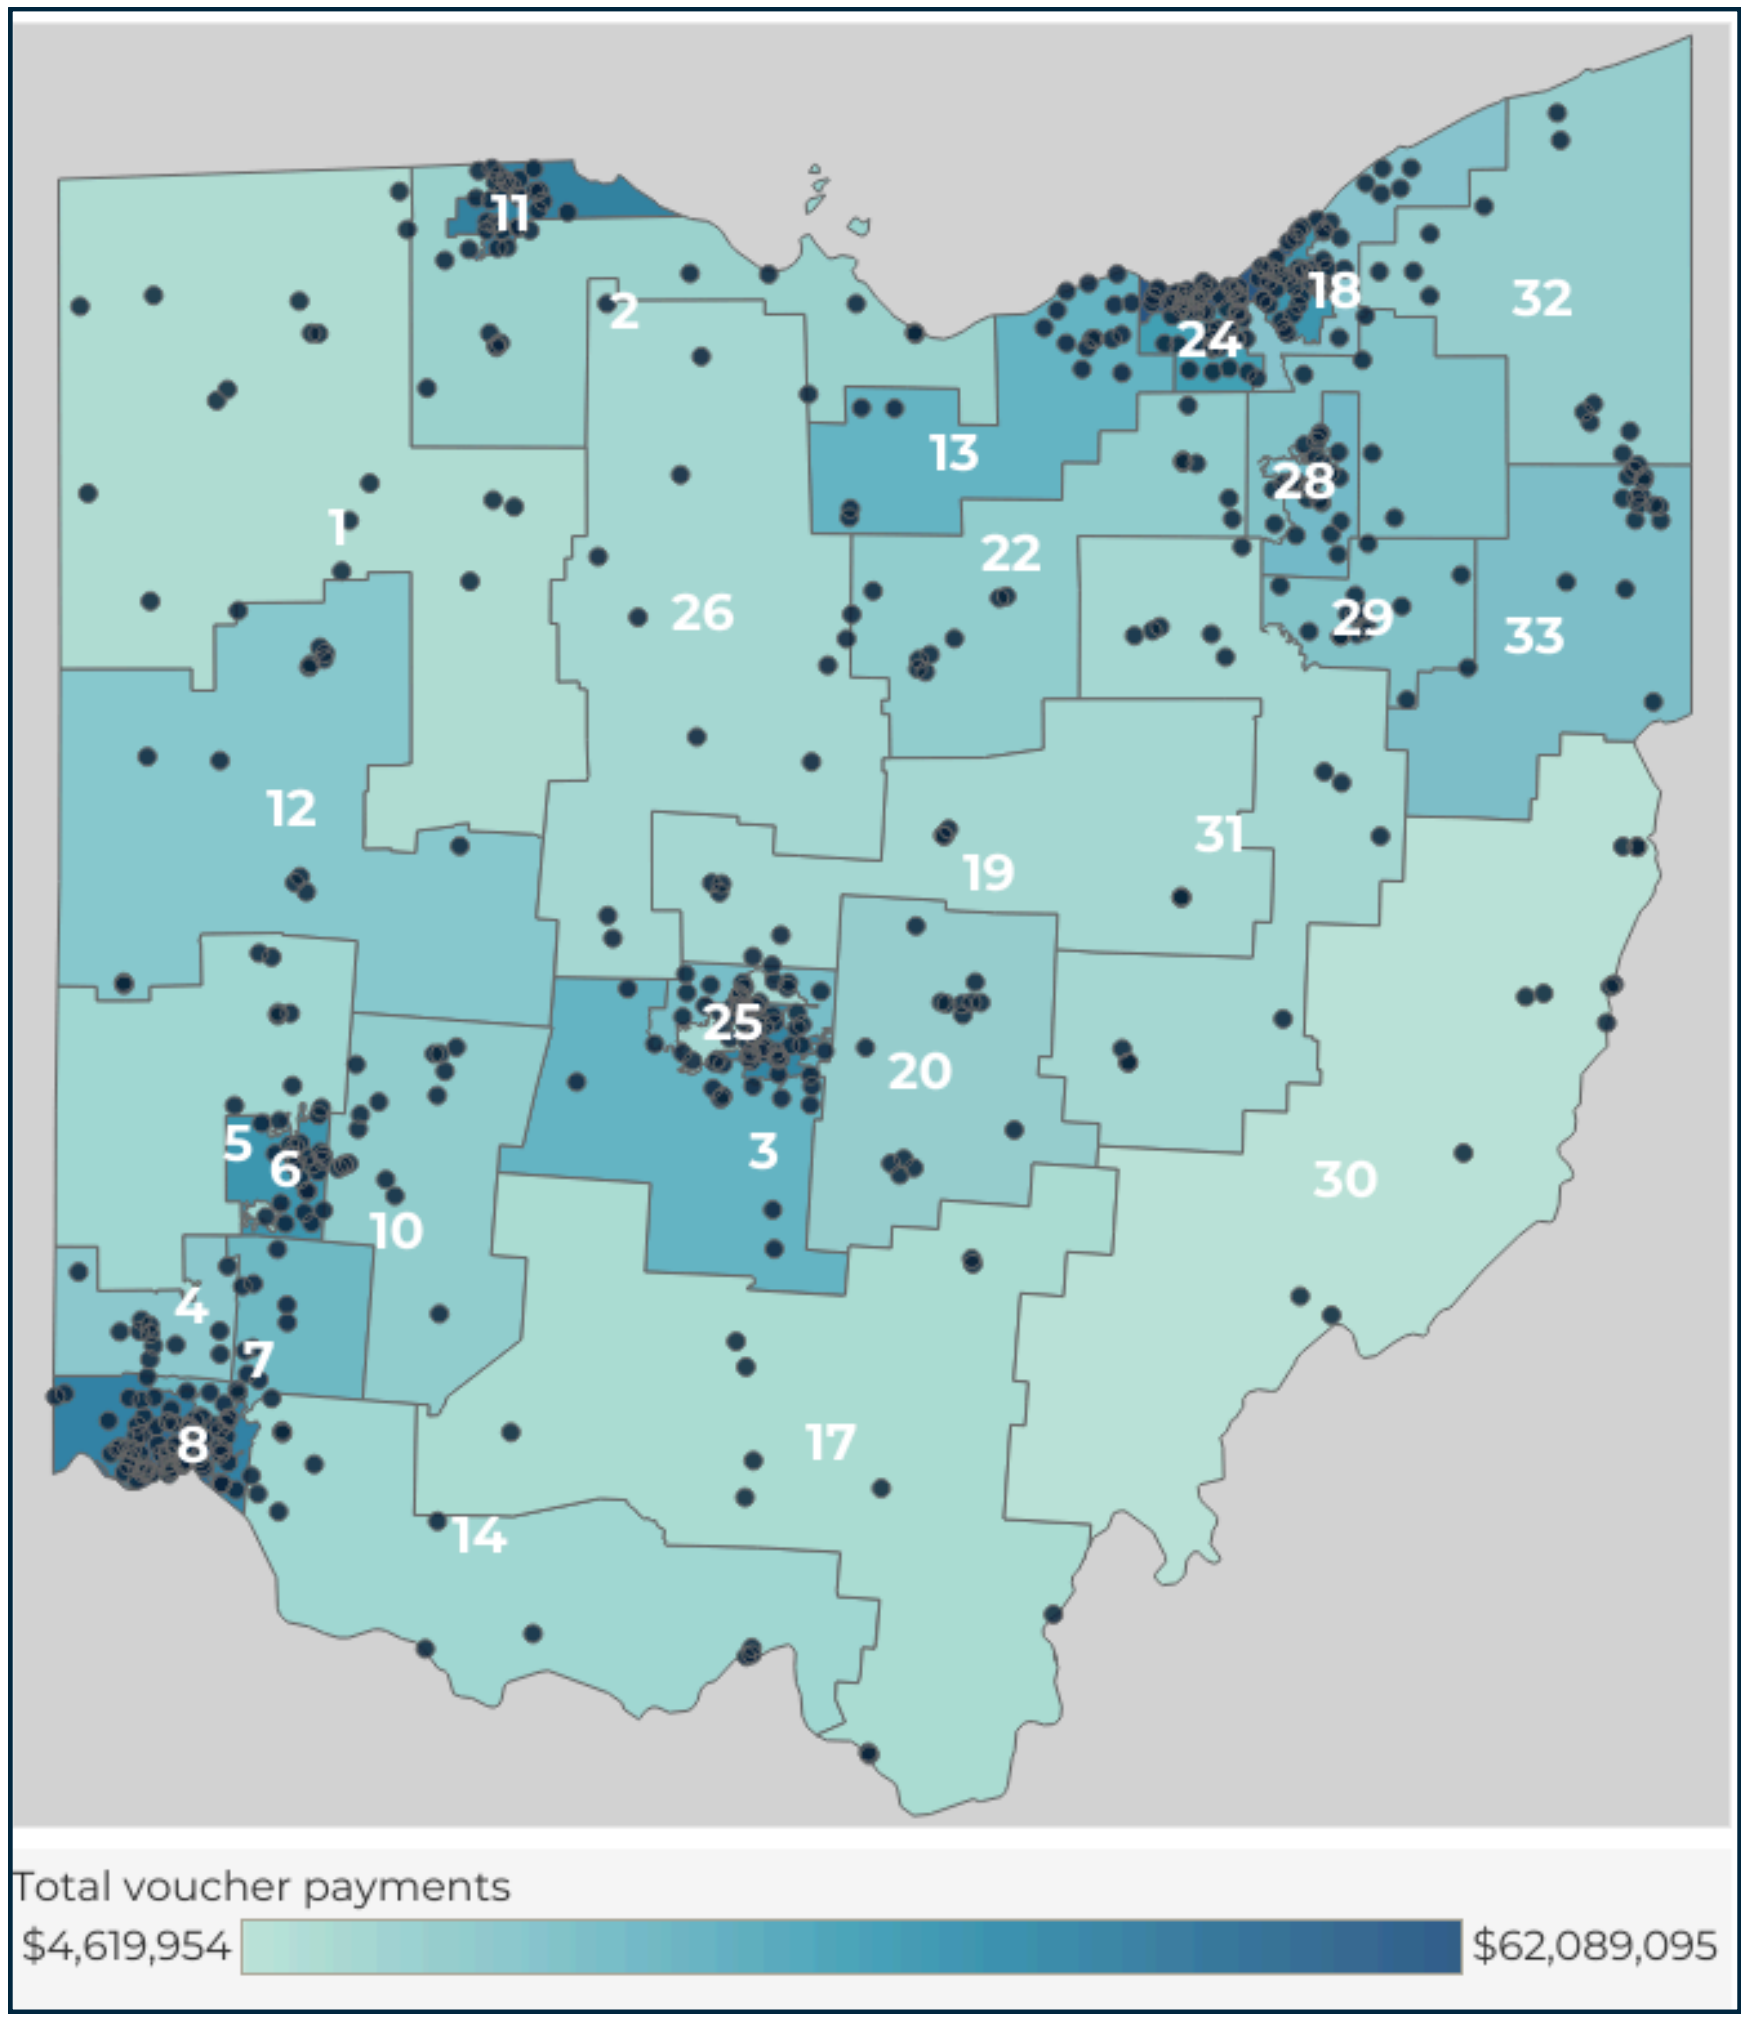

Email them at craig@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-5131

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 16

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 16 there are

19

private voucher schools attended by 4,603

voucher students.

In District 16 there are

89

public schools attended by

57,846

students.

Contact Senator Liston and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

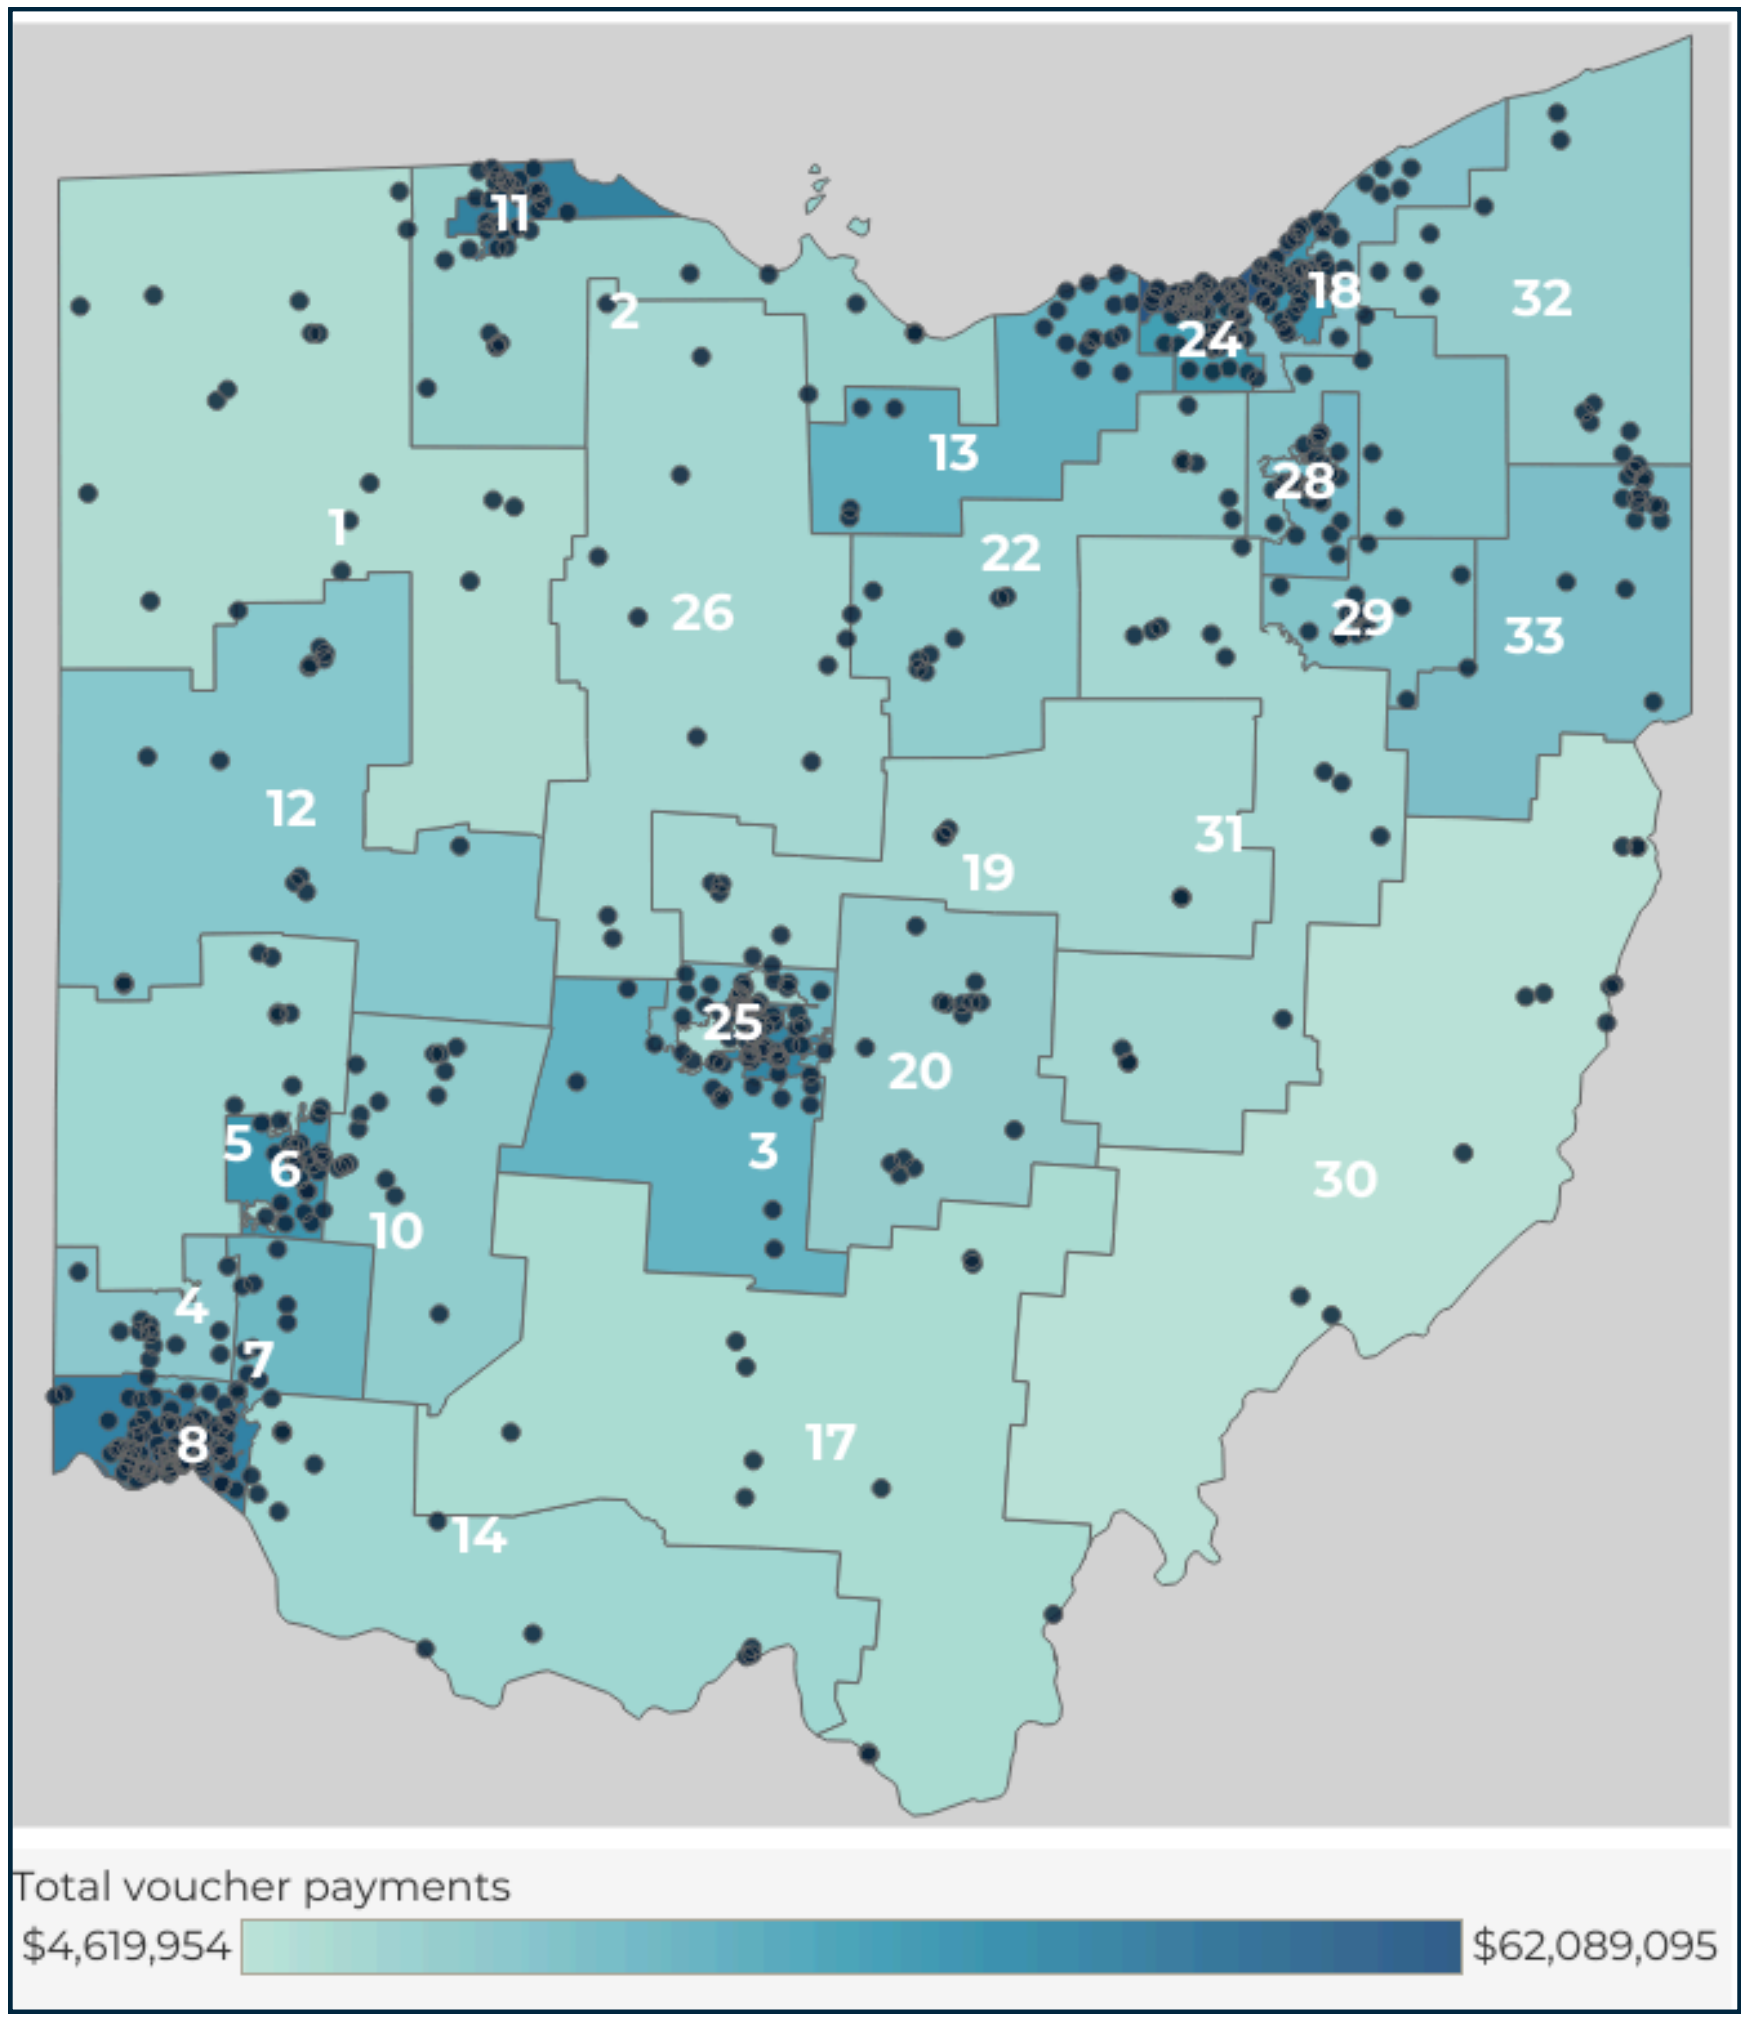

Email them at liston@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-5981

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 17

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 17 there are

11

private voucher schools attended by

1,456

voucher students.

In District 17 there are 126 public schools attended by 48,569

students.

Contact Senator Wilkin and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

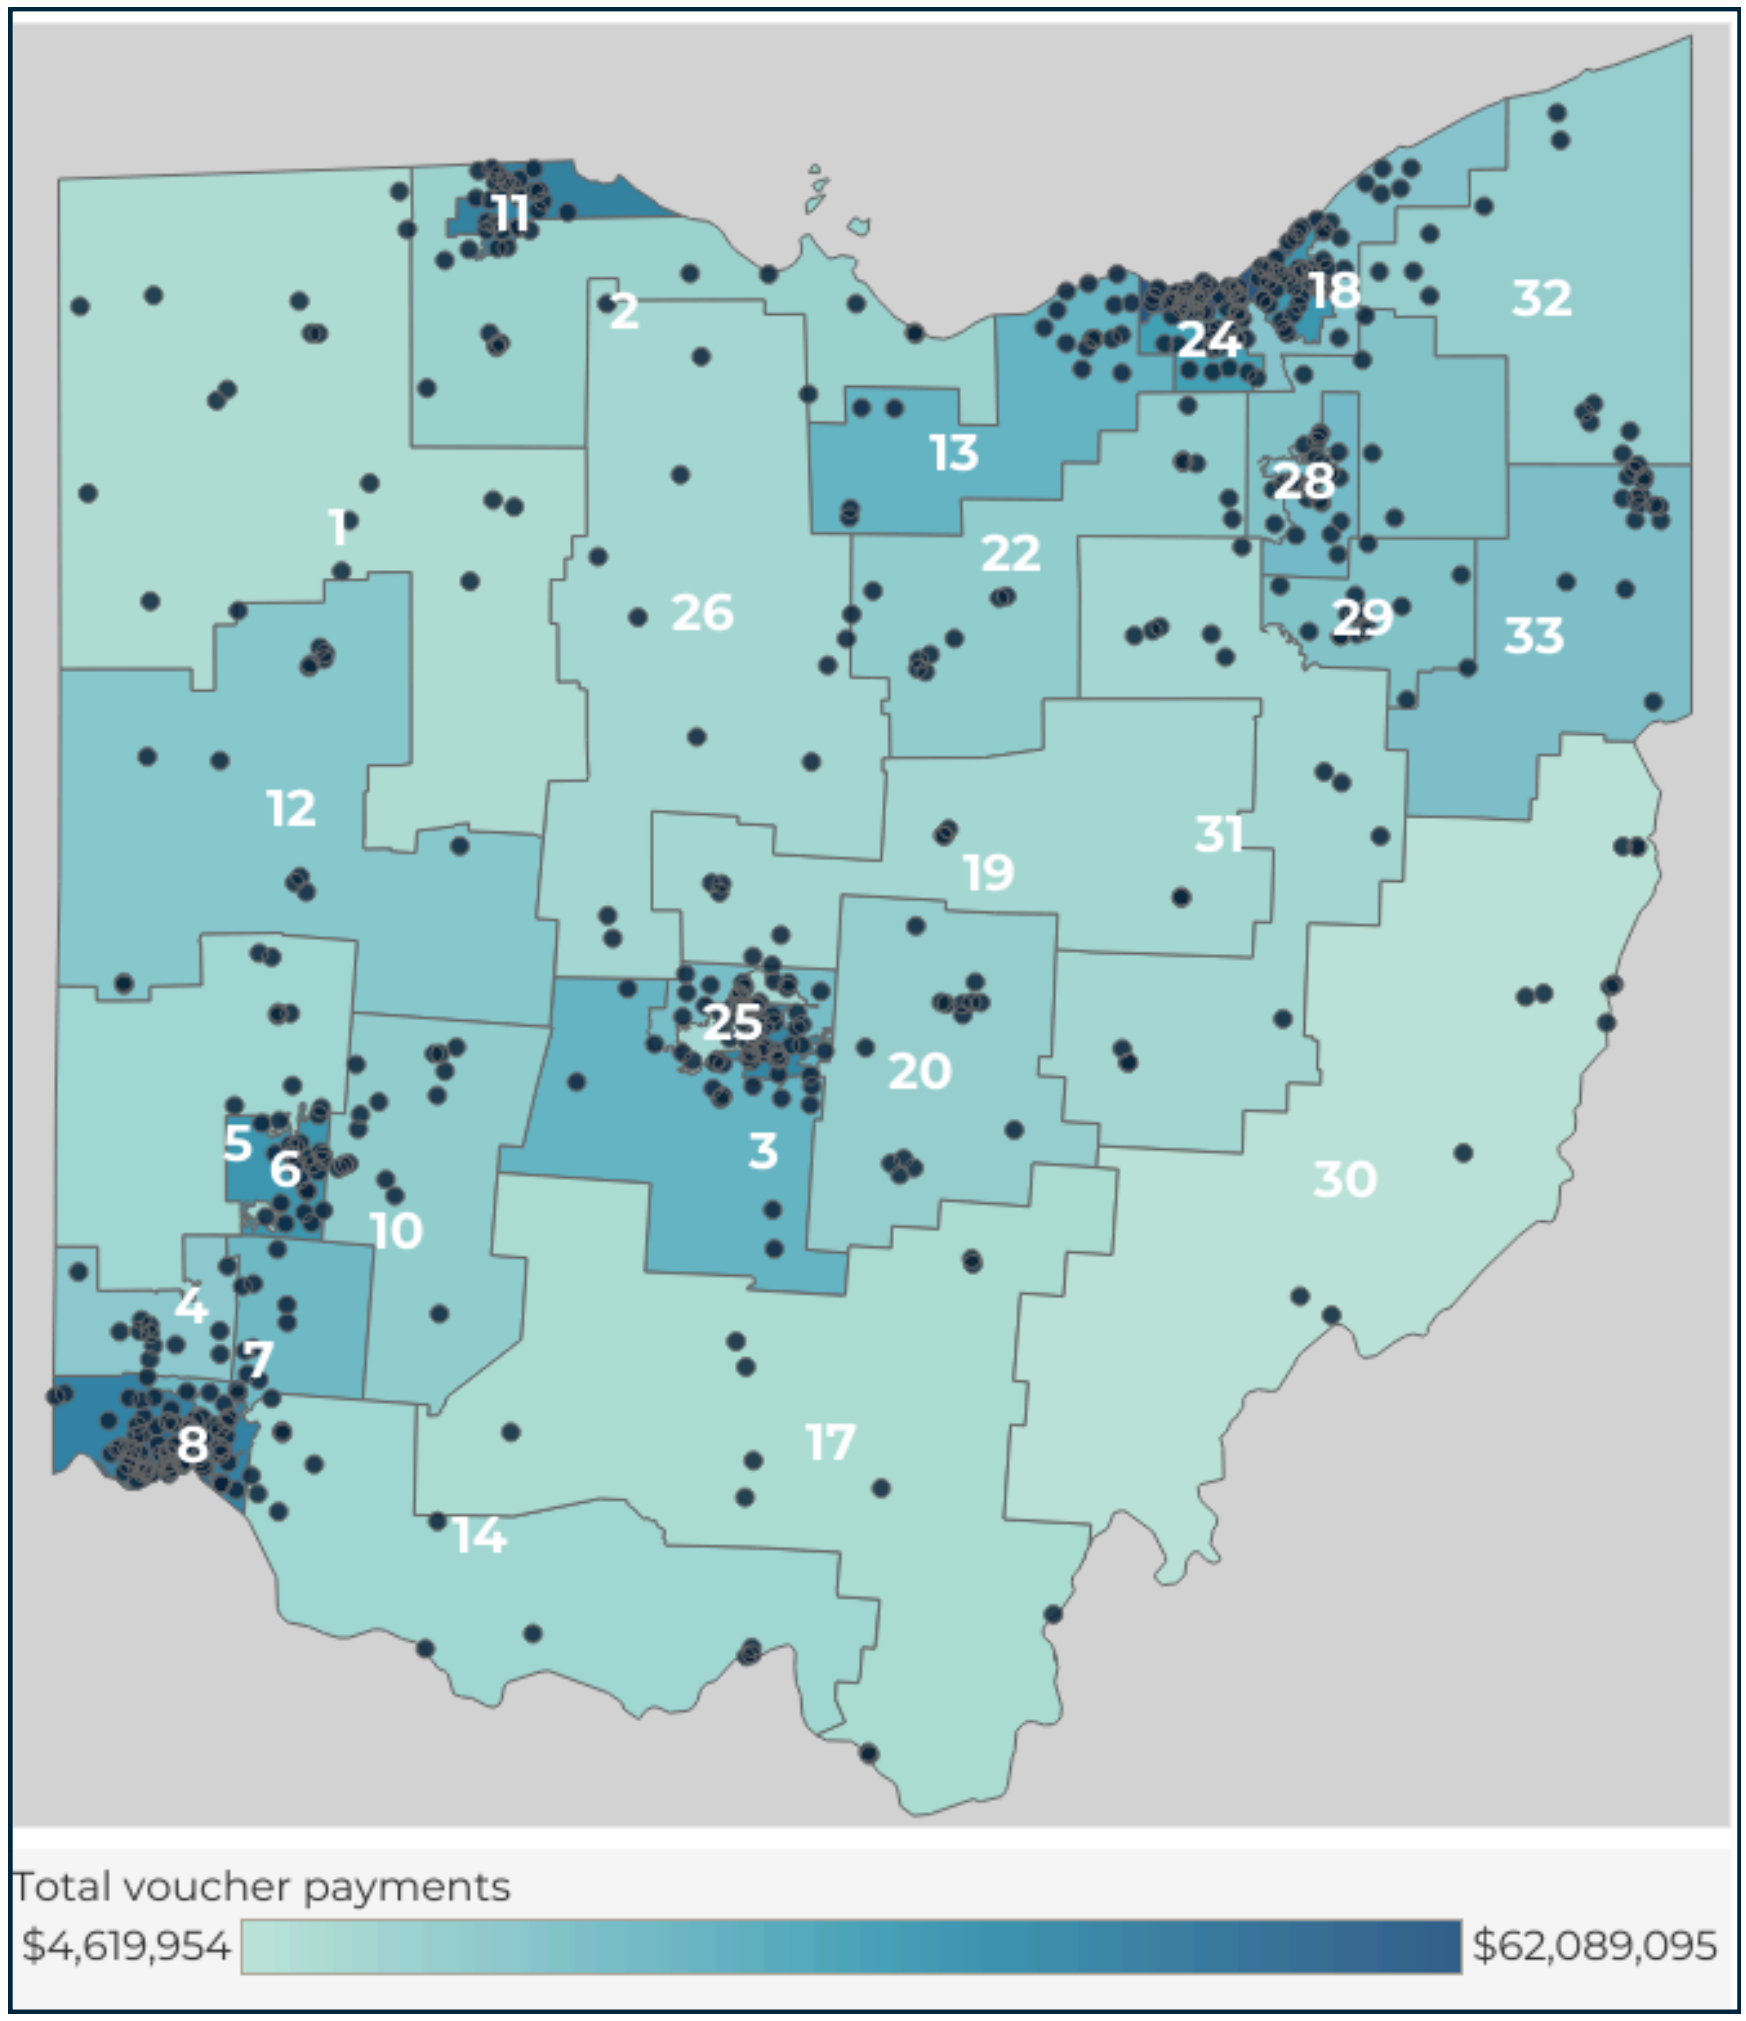

Email them at wilkin@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8156

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 18

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 18 there are

18

private voucher schools attended by 3,572

voucher students.

In District 18 there are

79

public schools attended by

44,194

students.

Contact Senator Cirino and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

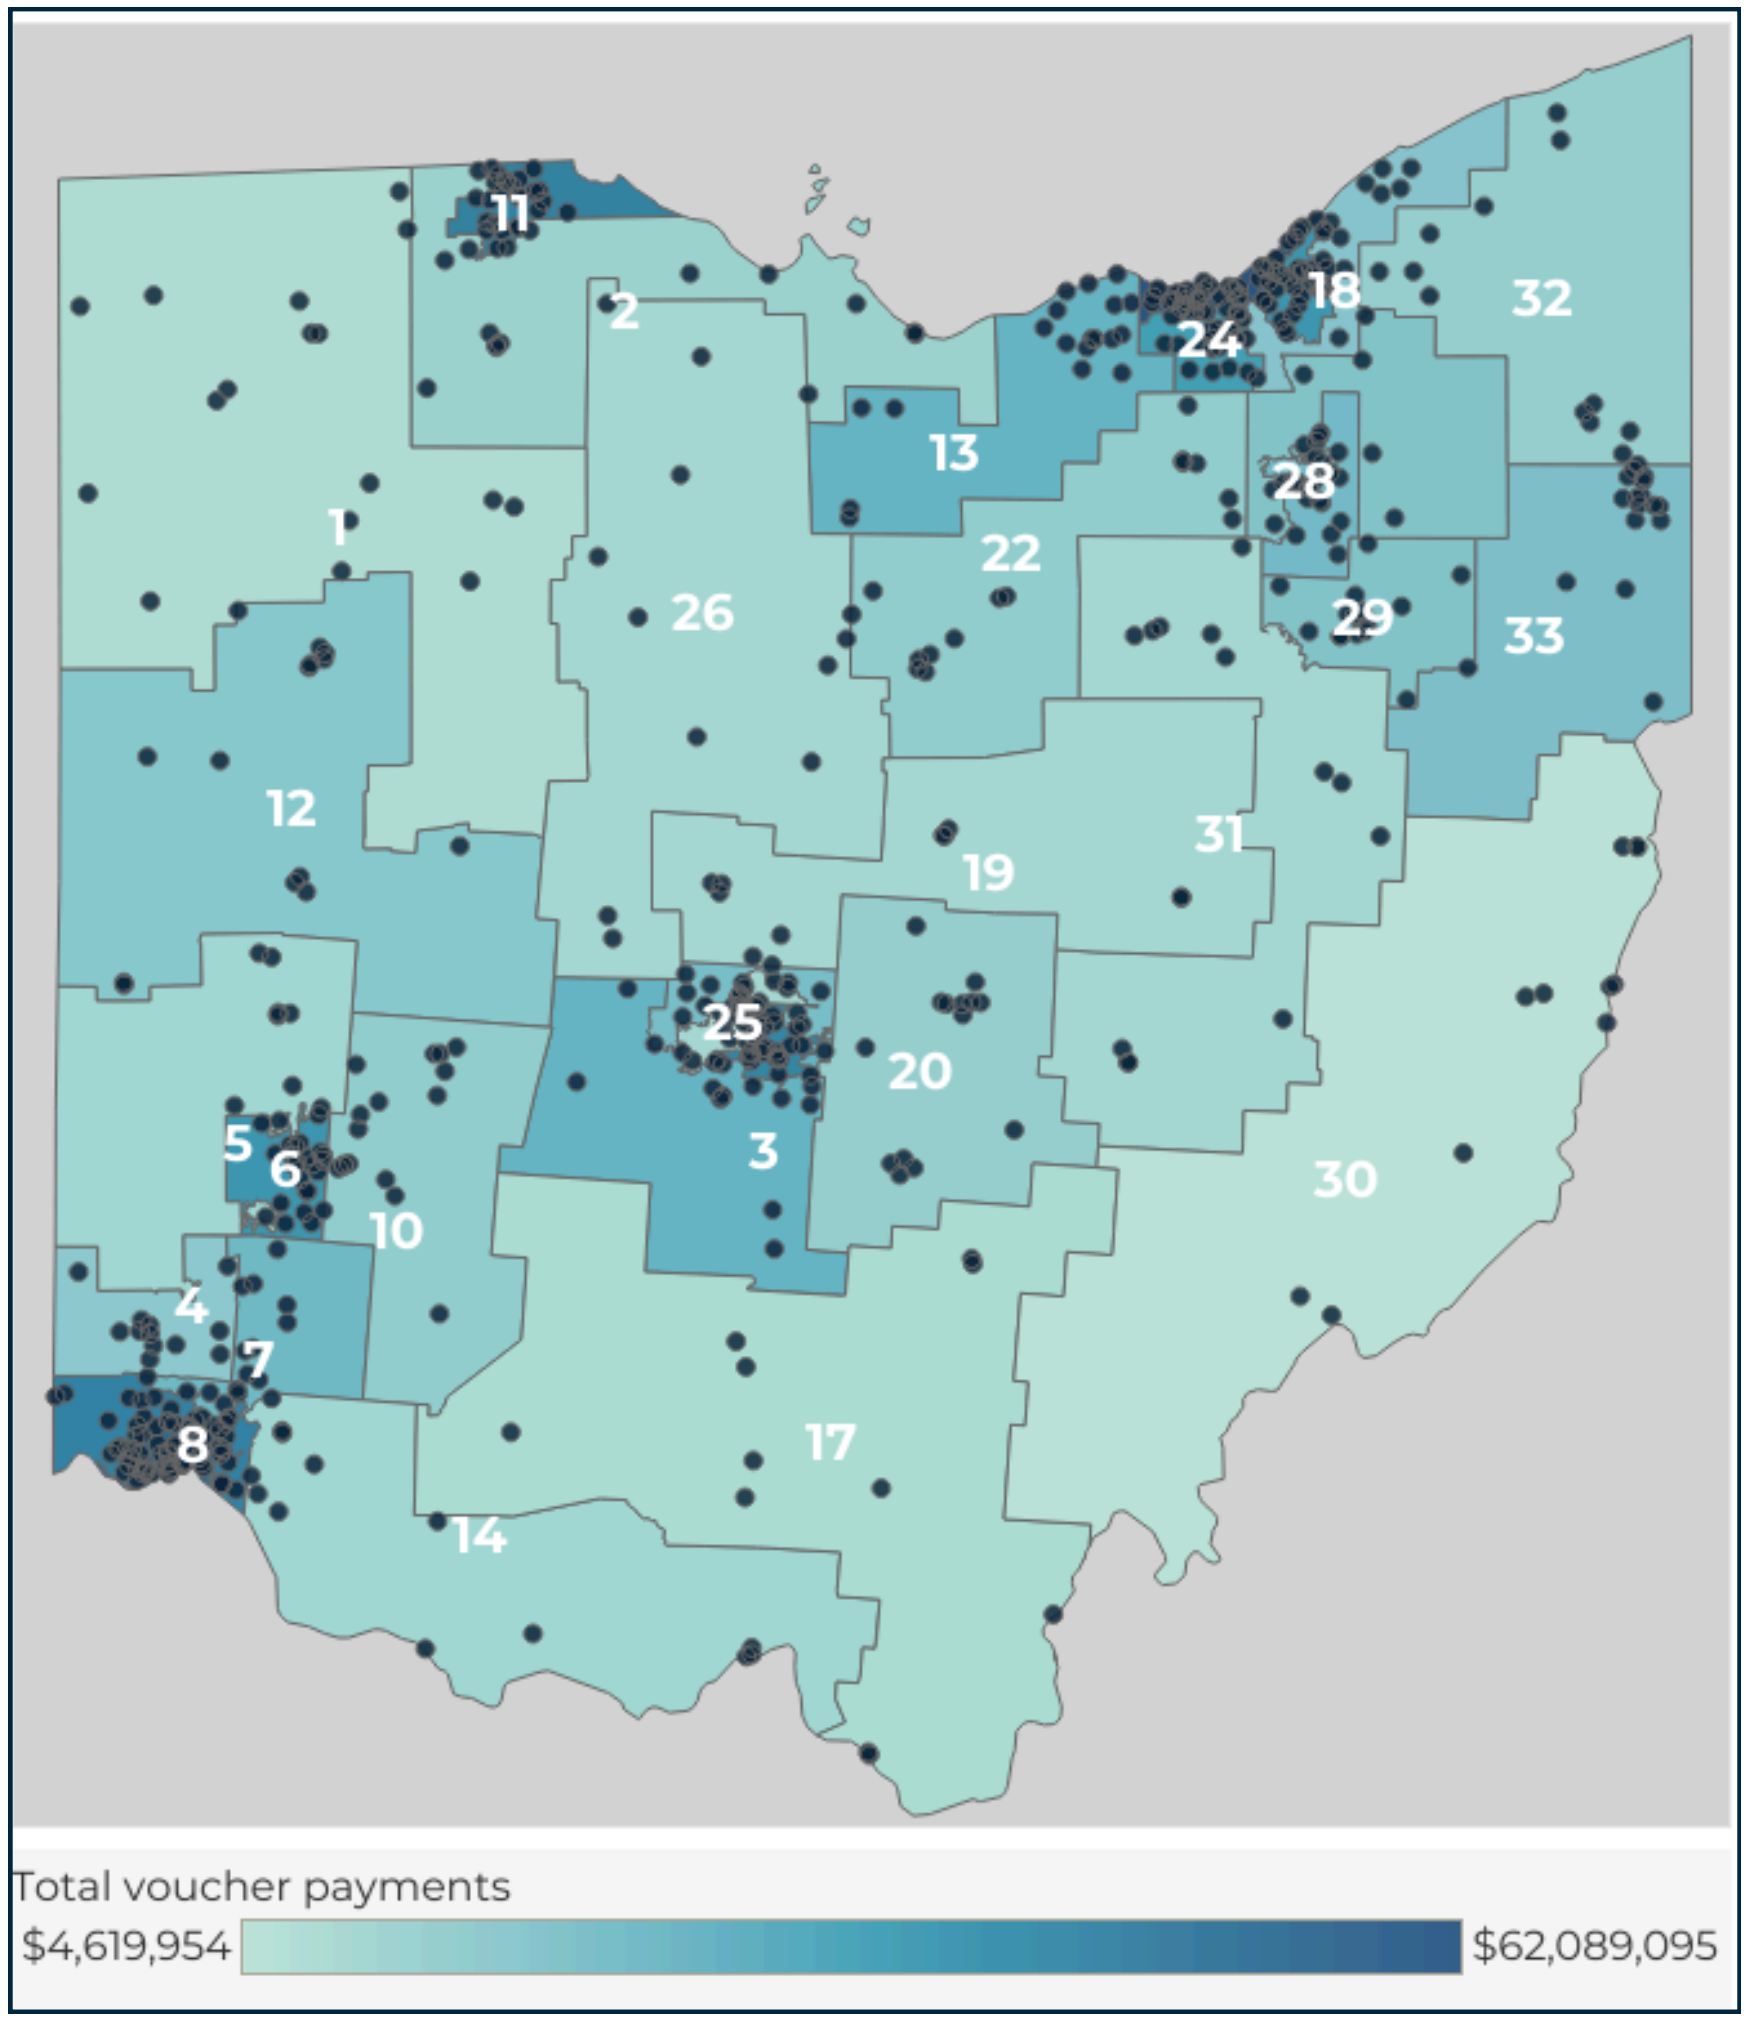

Email them at cirino@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-644-7718

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 19

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 19 there are 11

private voucher schools attended by

2,153

voucher students.

In District 19 there are

96

public schools attended by

57,091

students.

Contact Senator Brenner and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

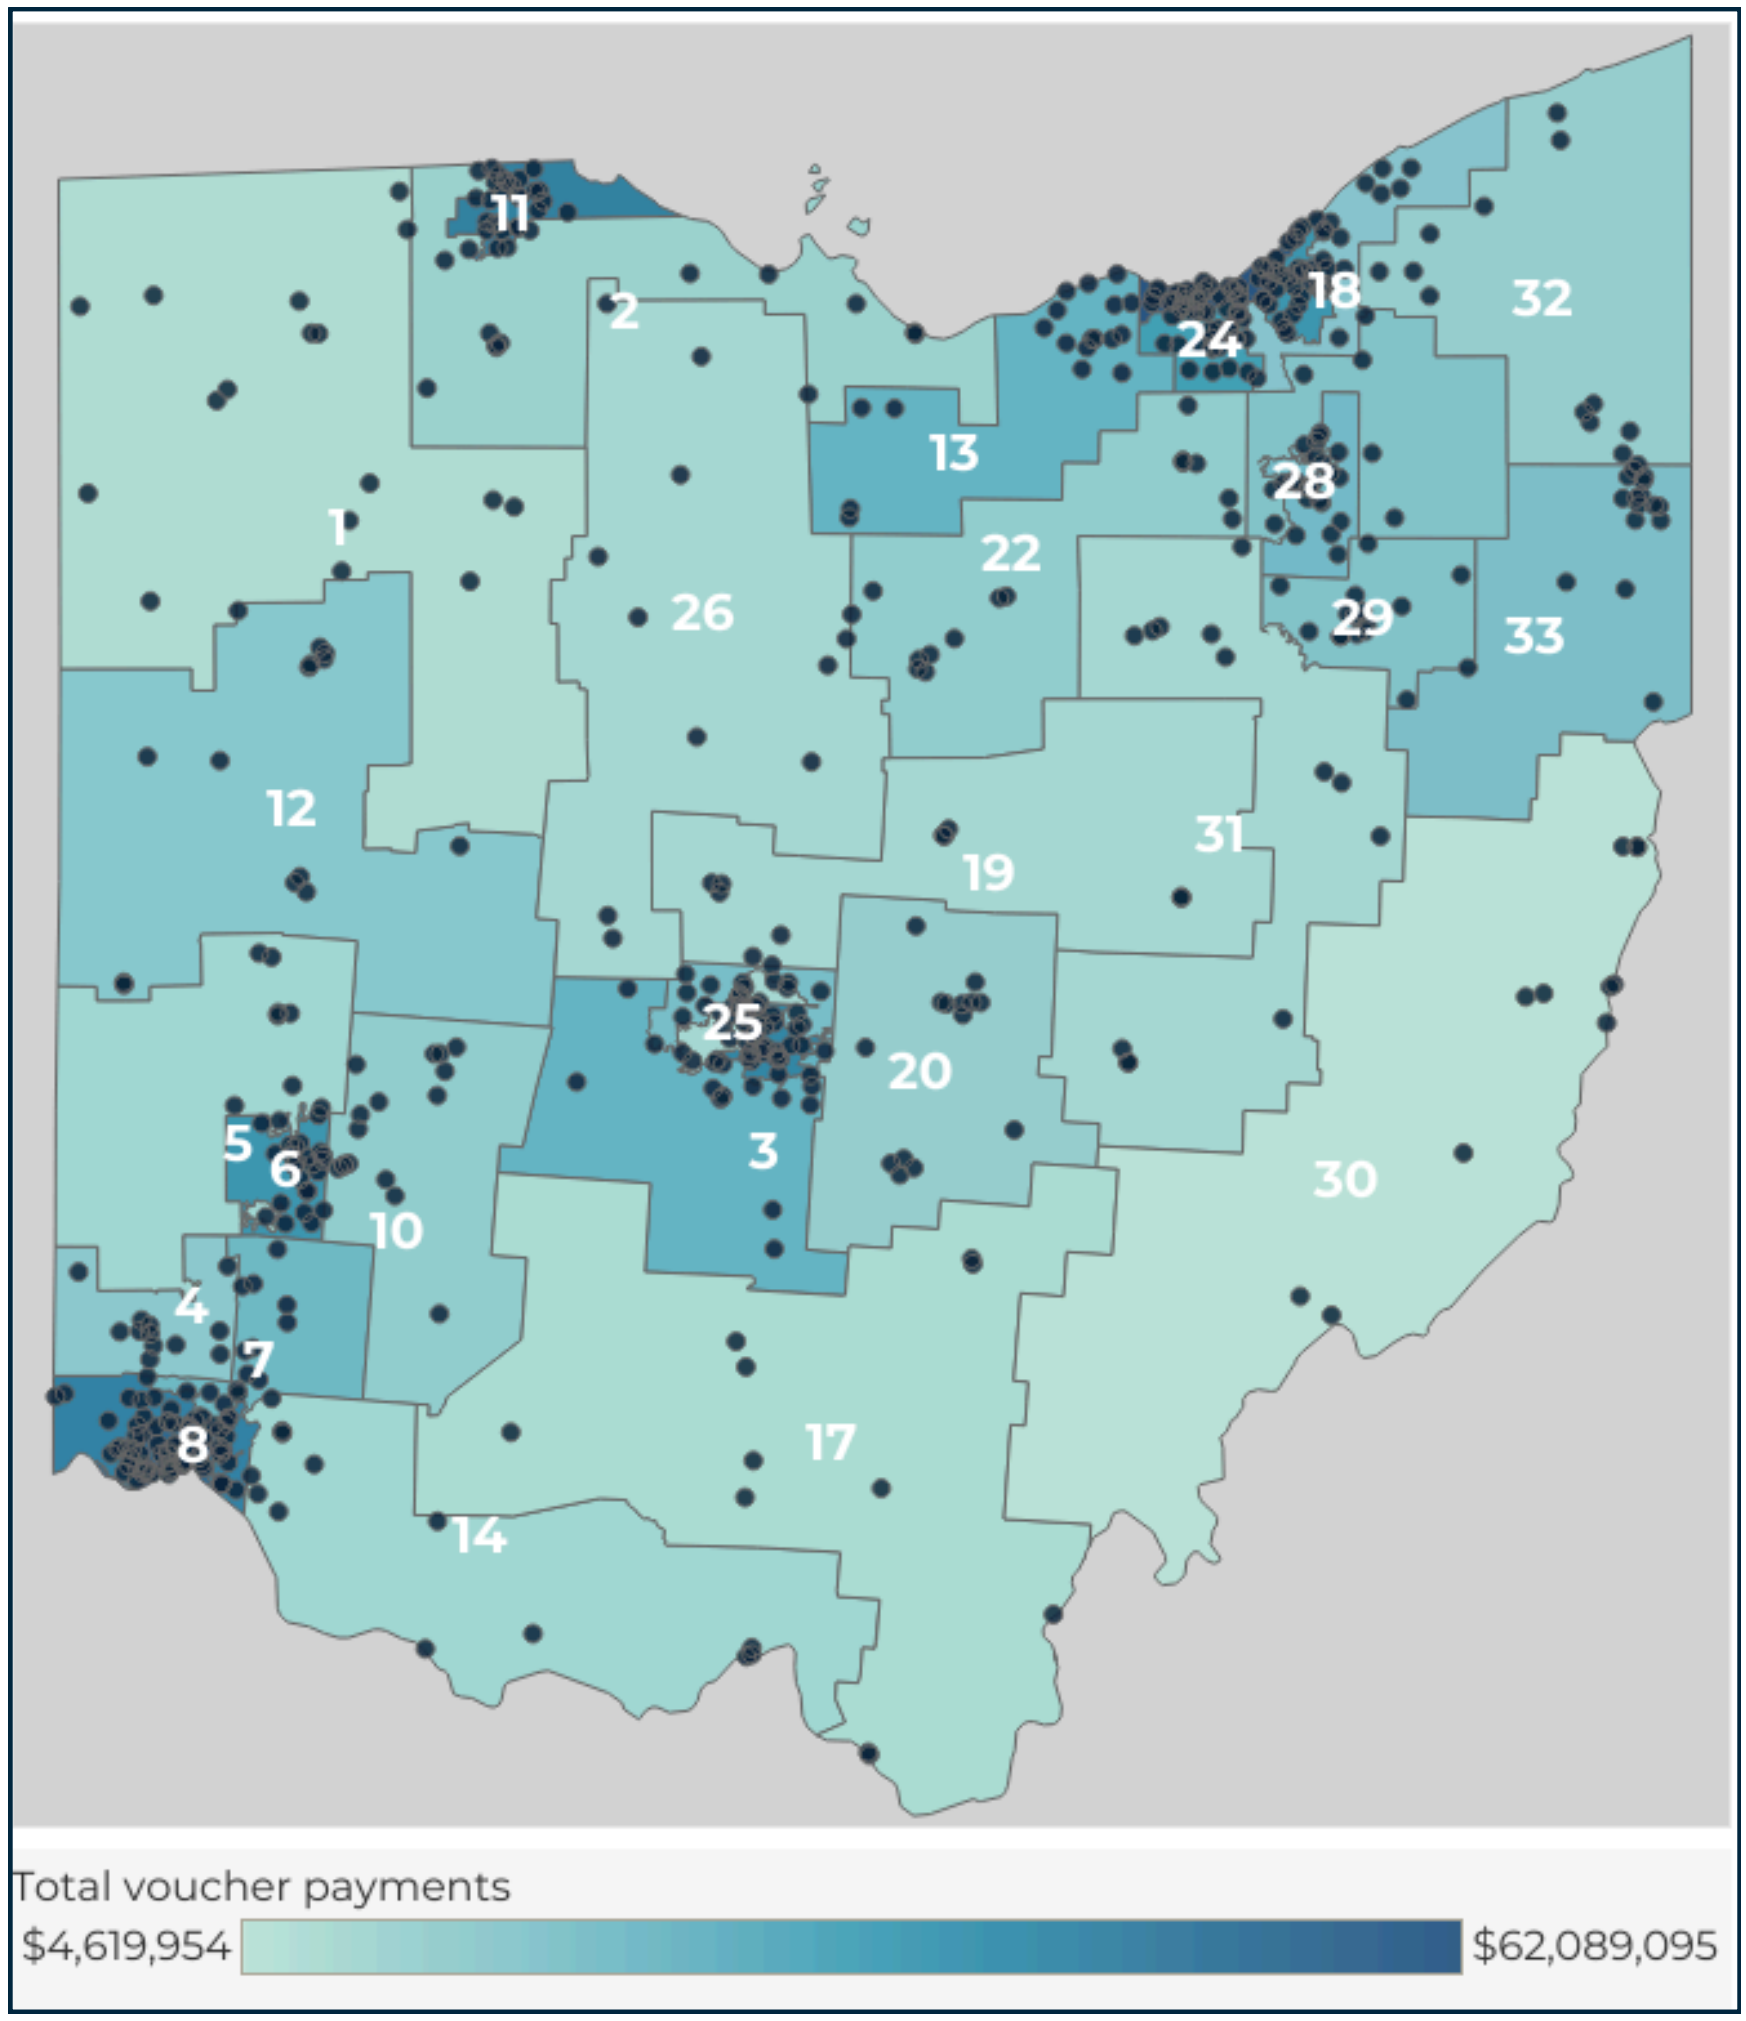

Email them at brenner@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8086

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 2

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 2 there are

17

private voucher schools attended by 2,540

voucher students.

In District 2 there are

94

public schools attended by 45,681

students.

Contact Senator Gavarone and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

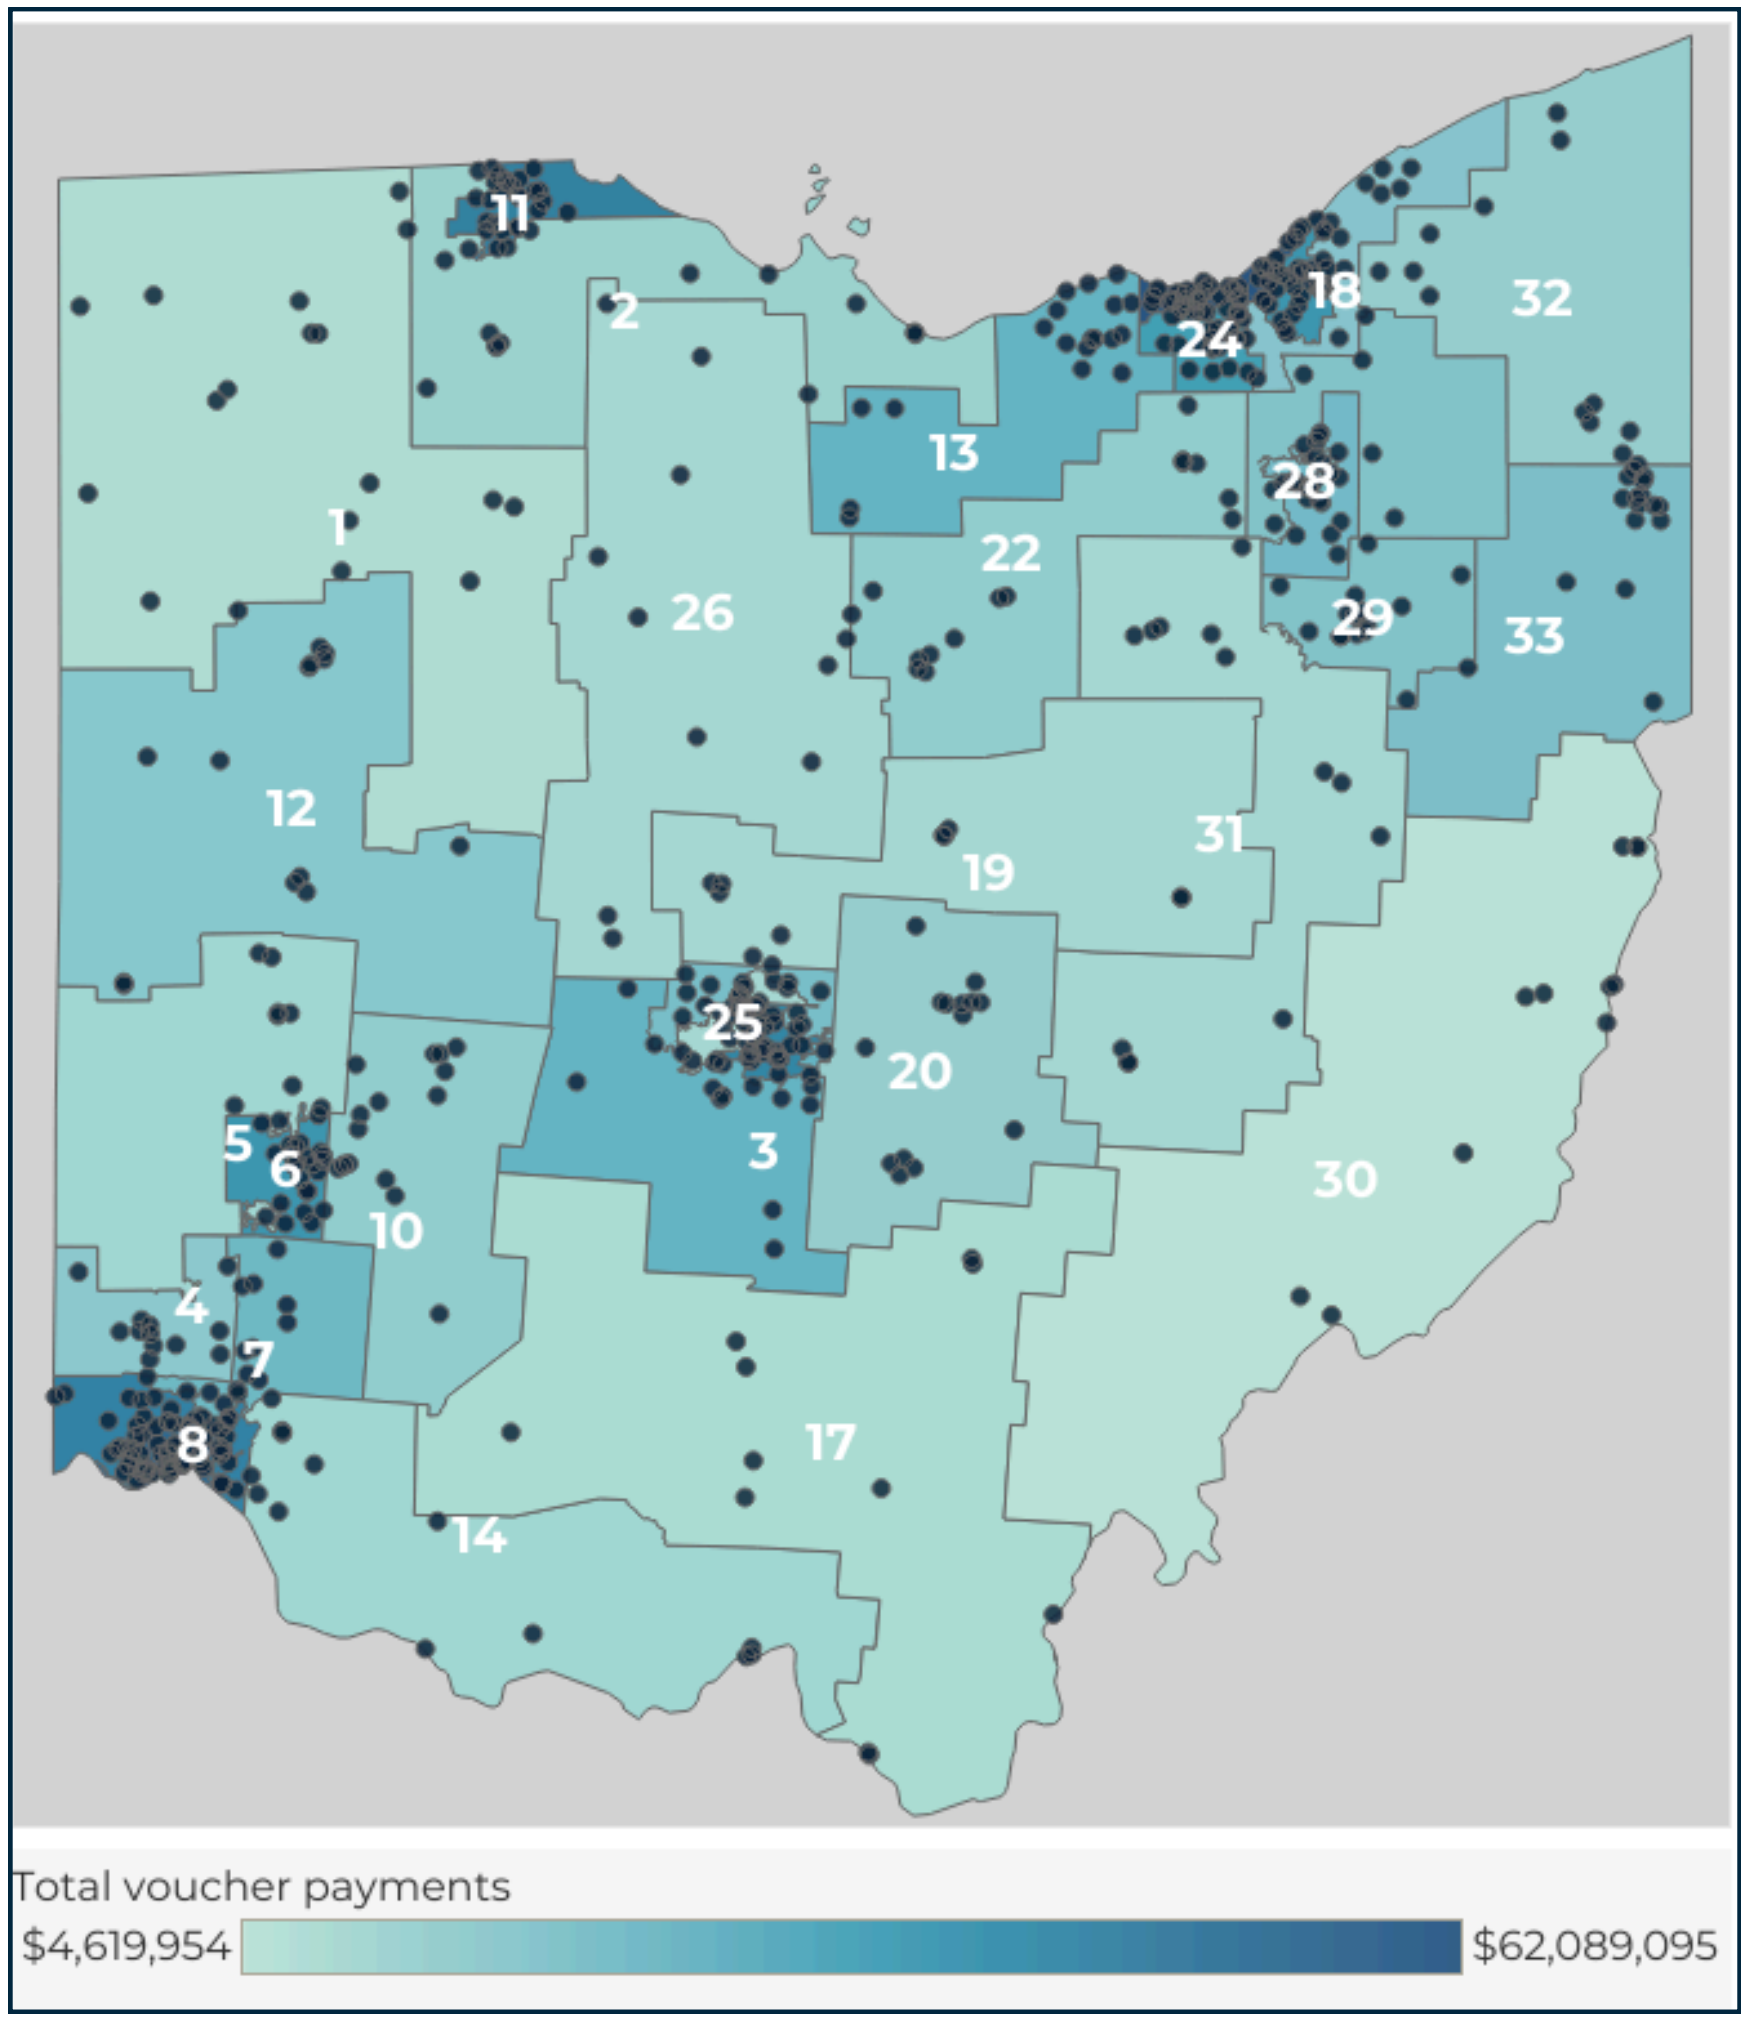

Email them at gavarone@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8060

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 20

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 20 there are

14

private voucher schools attended by

2,416

voucher students.

In District 20 there are 107

public schools attended by

57,253

students.

Contact Senator Schaffer and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

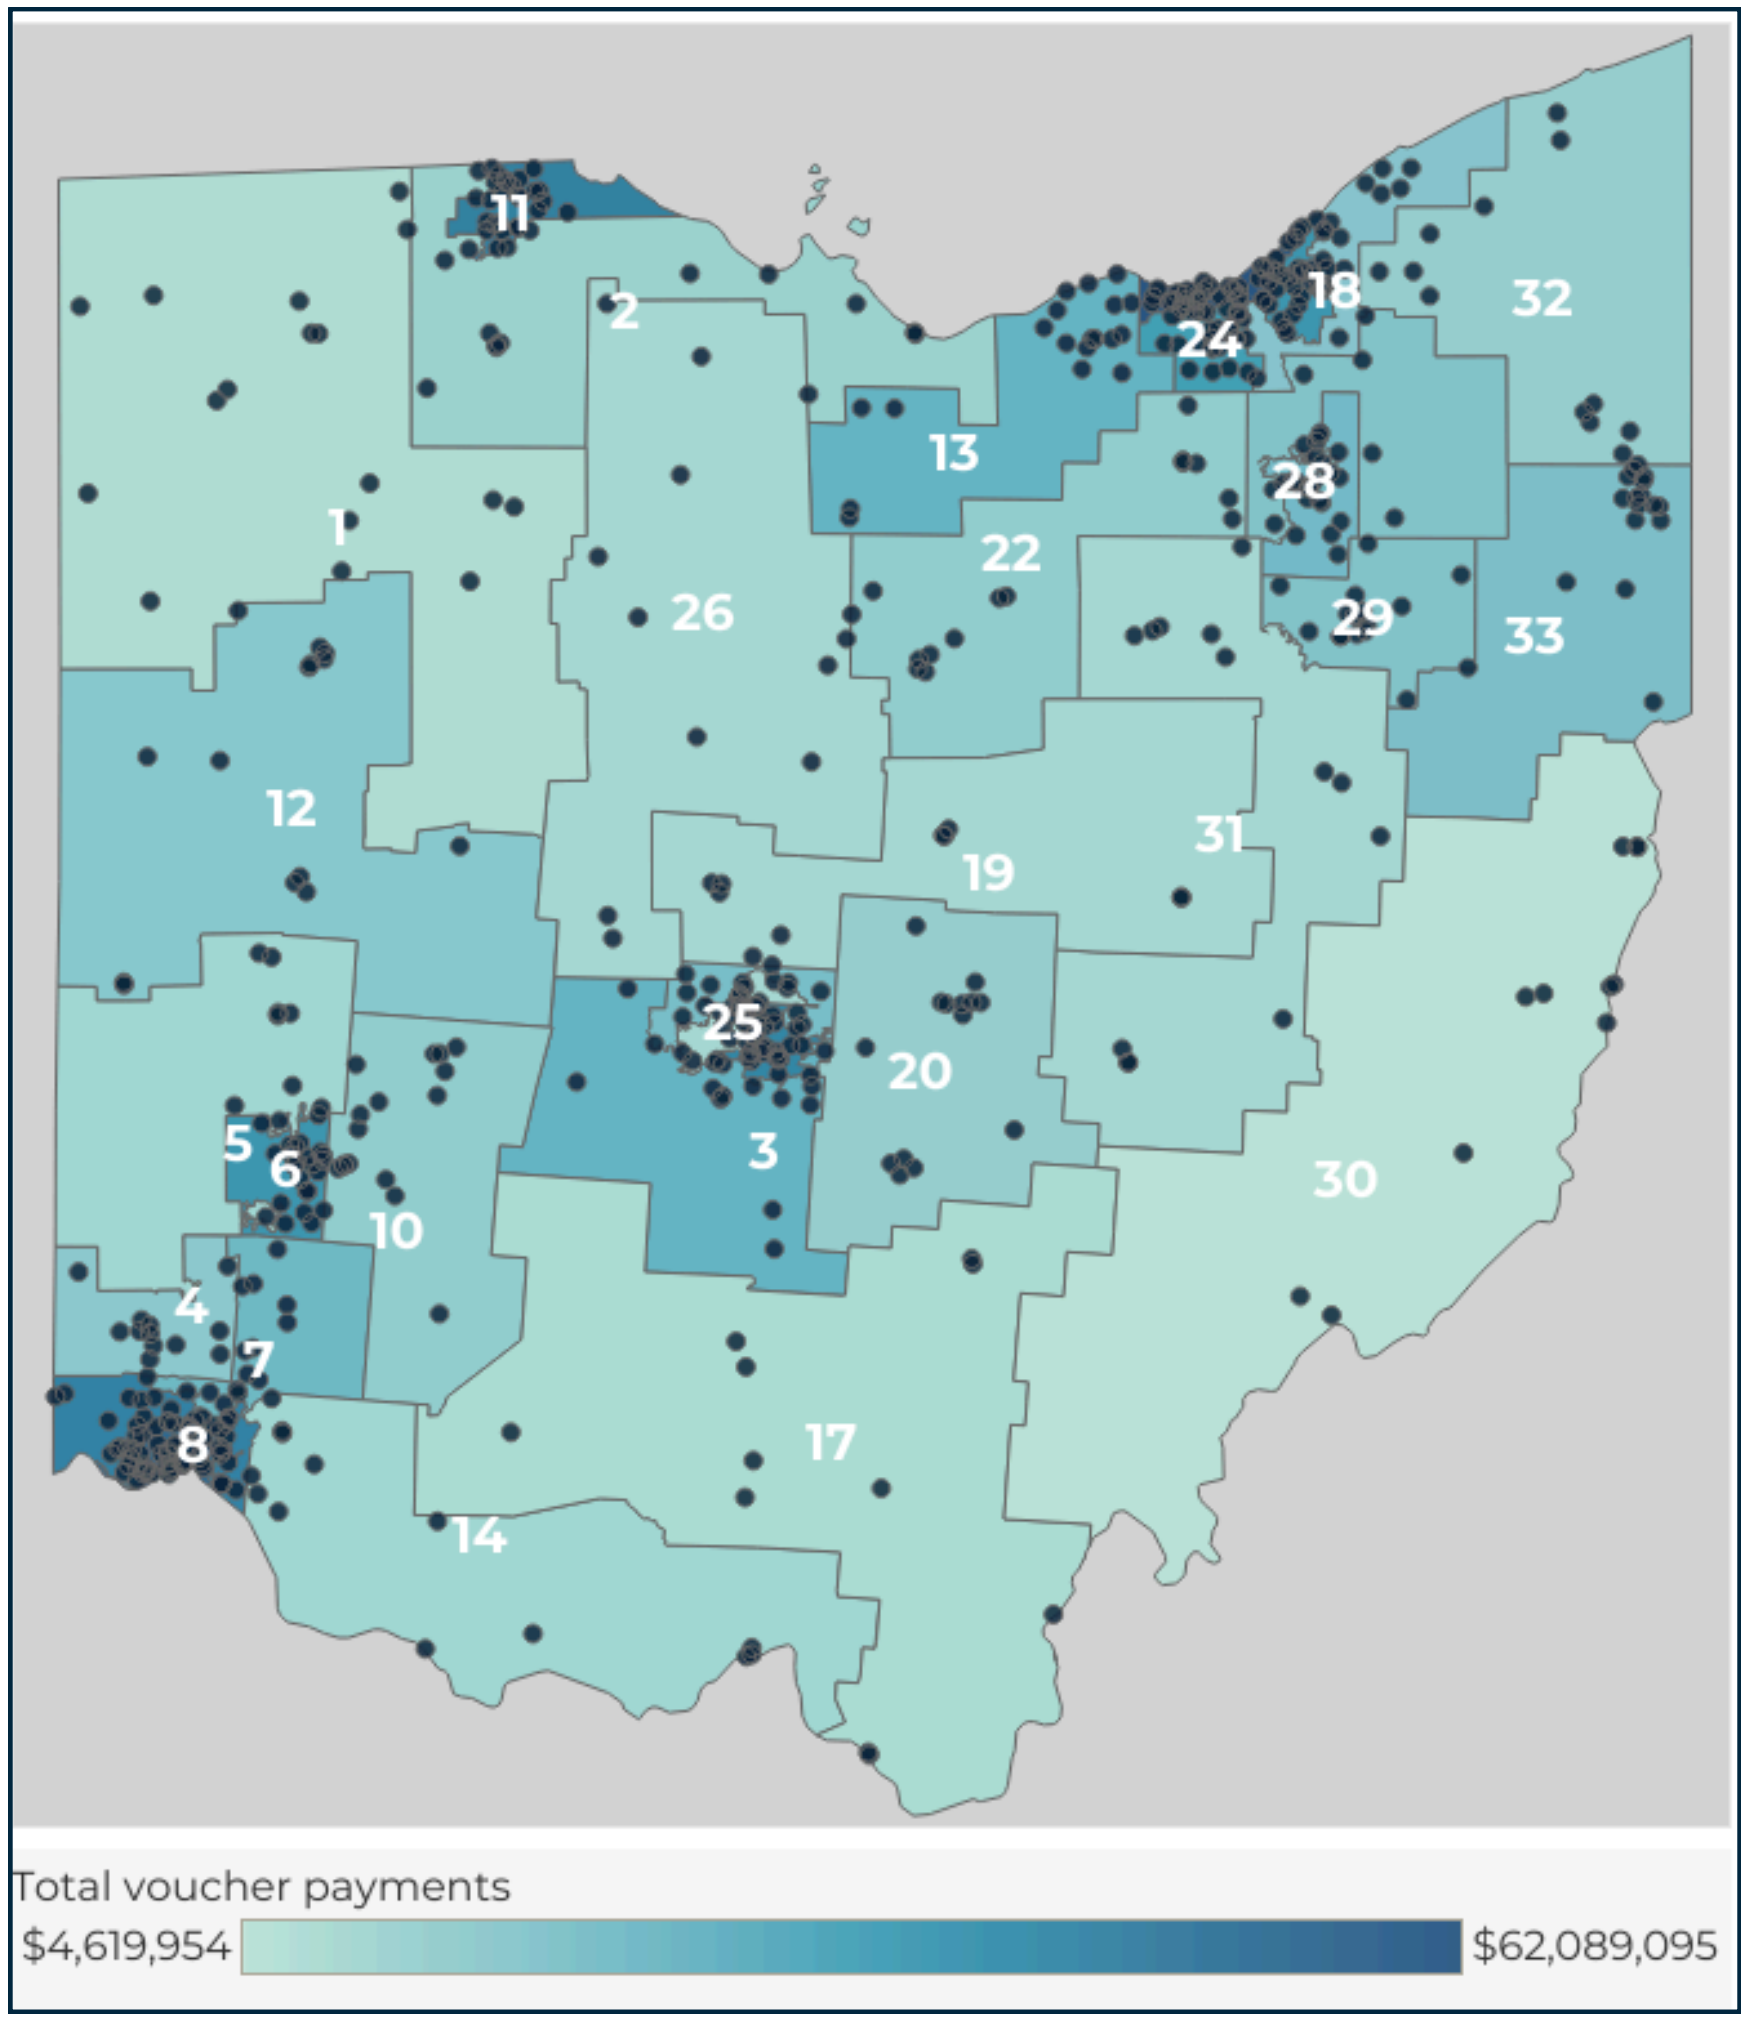

Email them at schaffer@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8076

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 21

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 21 there are

22

private voucher schools attended by 5,843

voucher students.

In District 21 there are

79

public schools attended by 35,610

students.

Contact Senator Smith and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

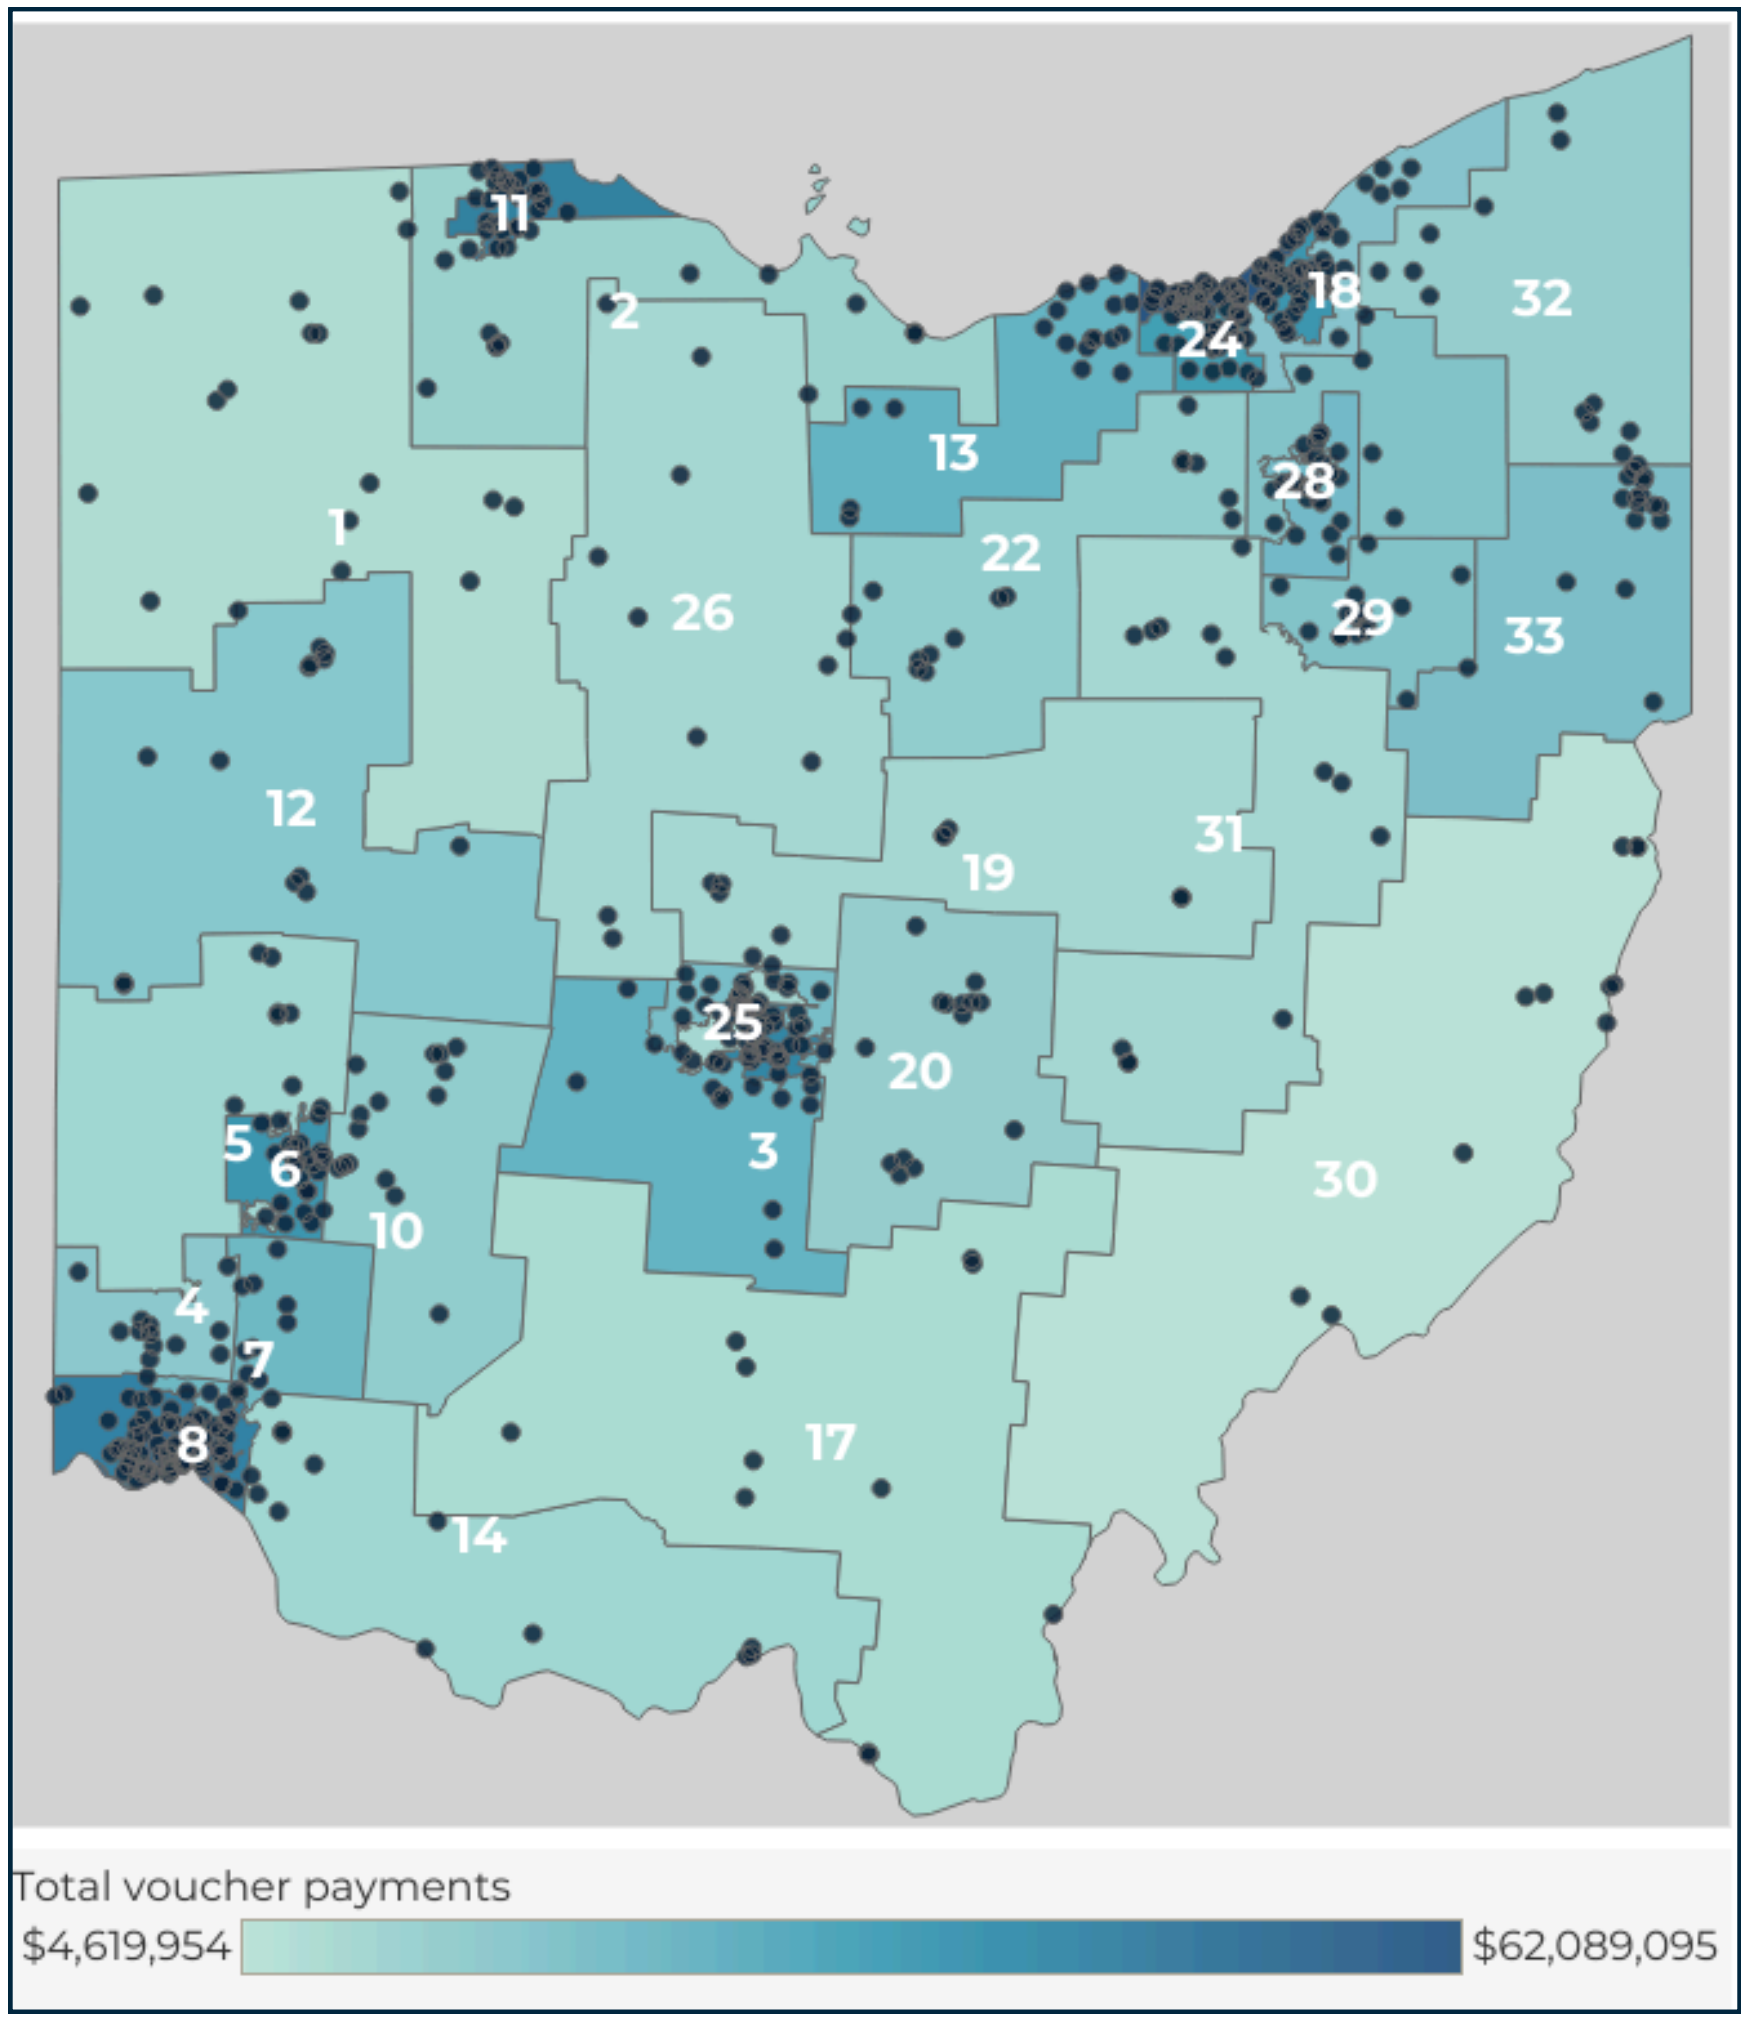

Email them at smith@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-4857

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 22

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 22 there are

15

private voucher schools attended by

2,755

voucher students.

In District 22 there are

98

public schools attended by

44,894

students.

Contact Senator Romanchuk and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

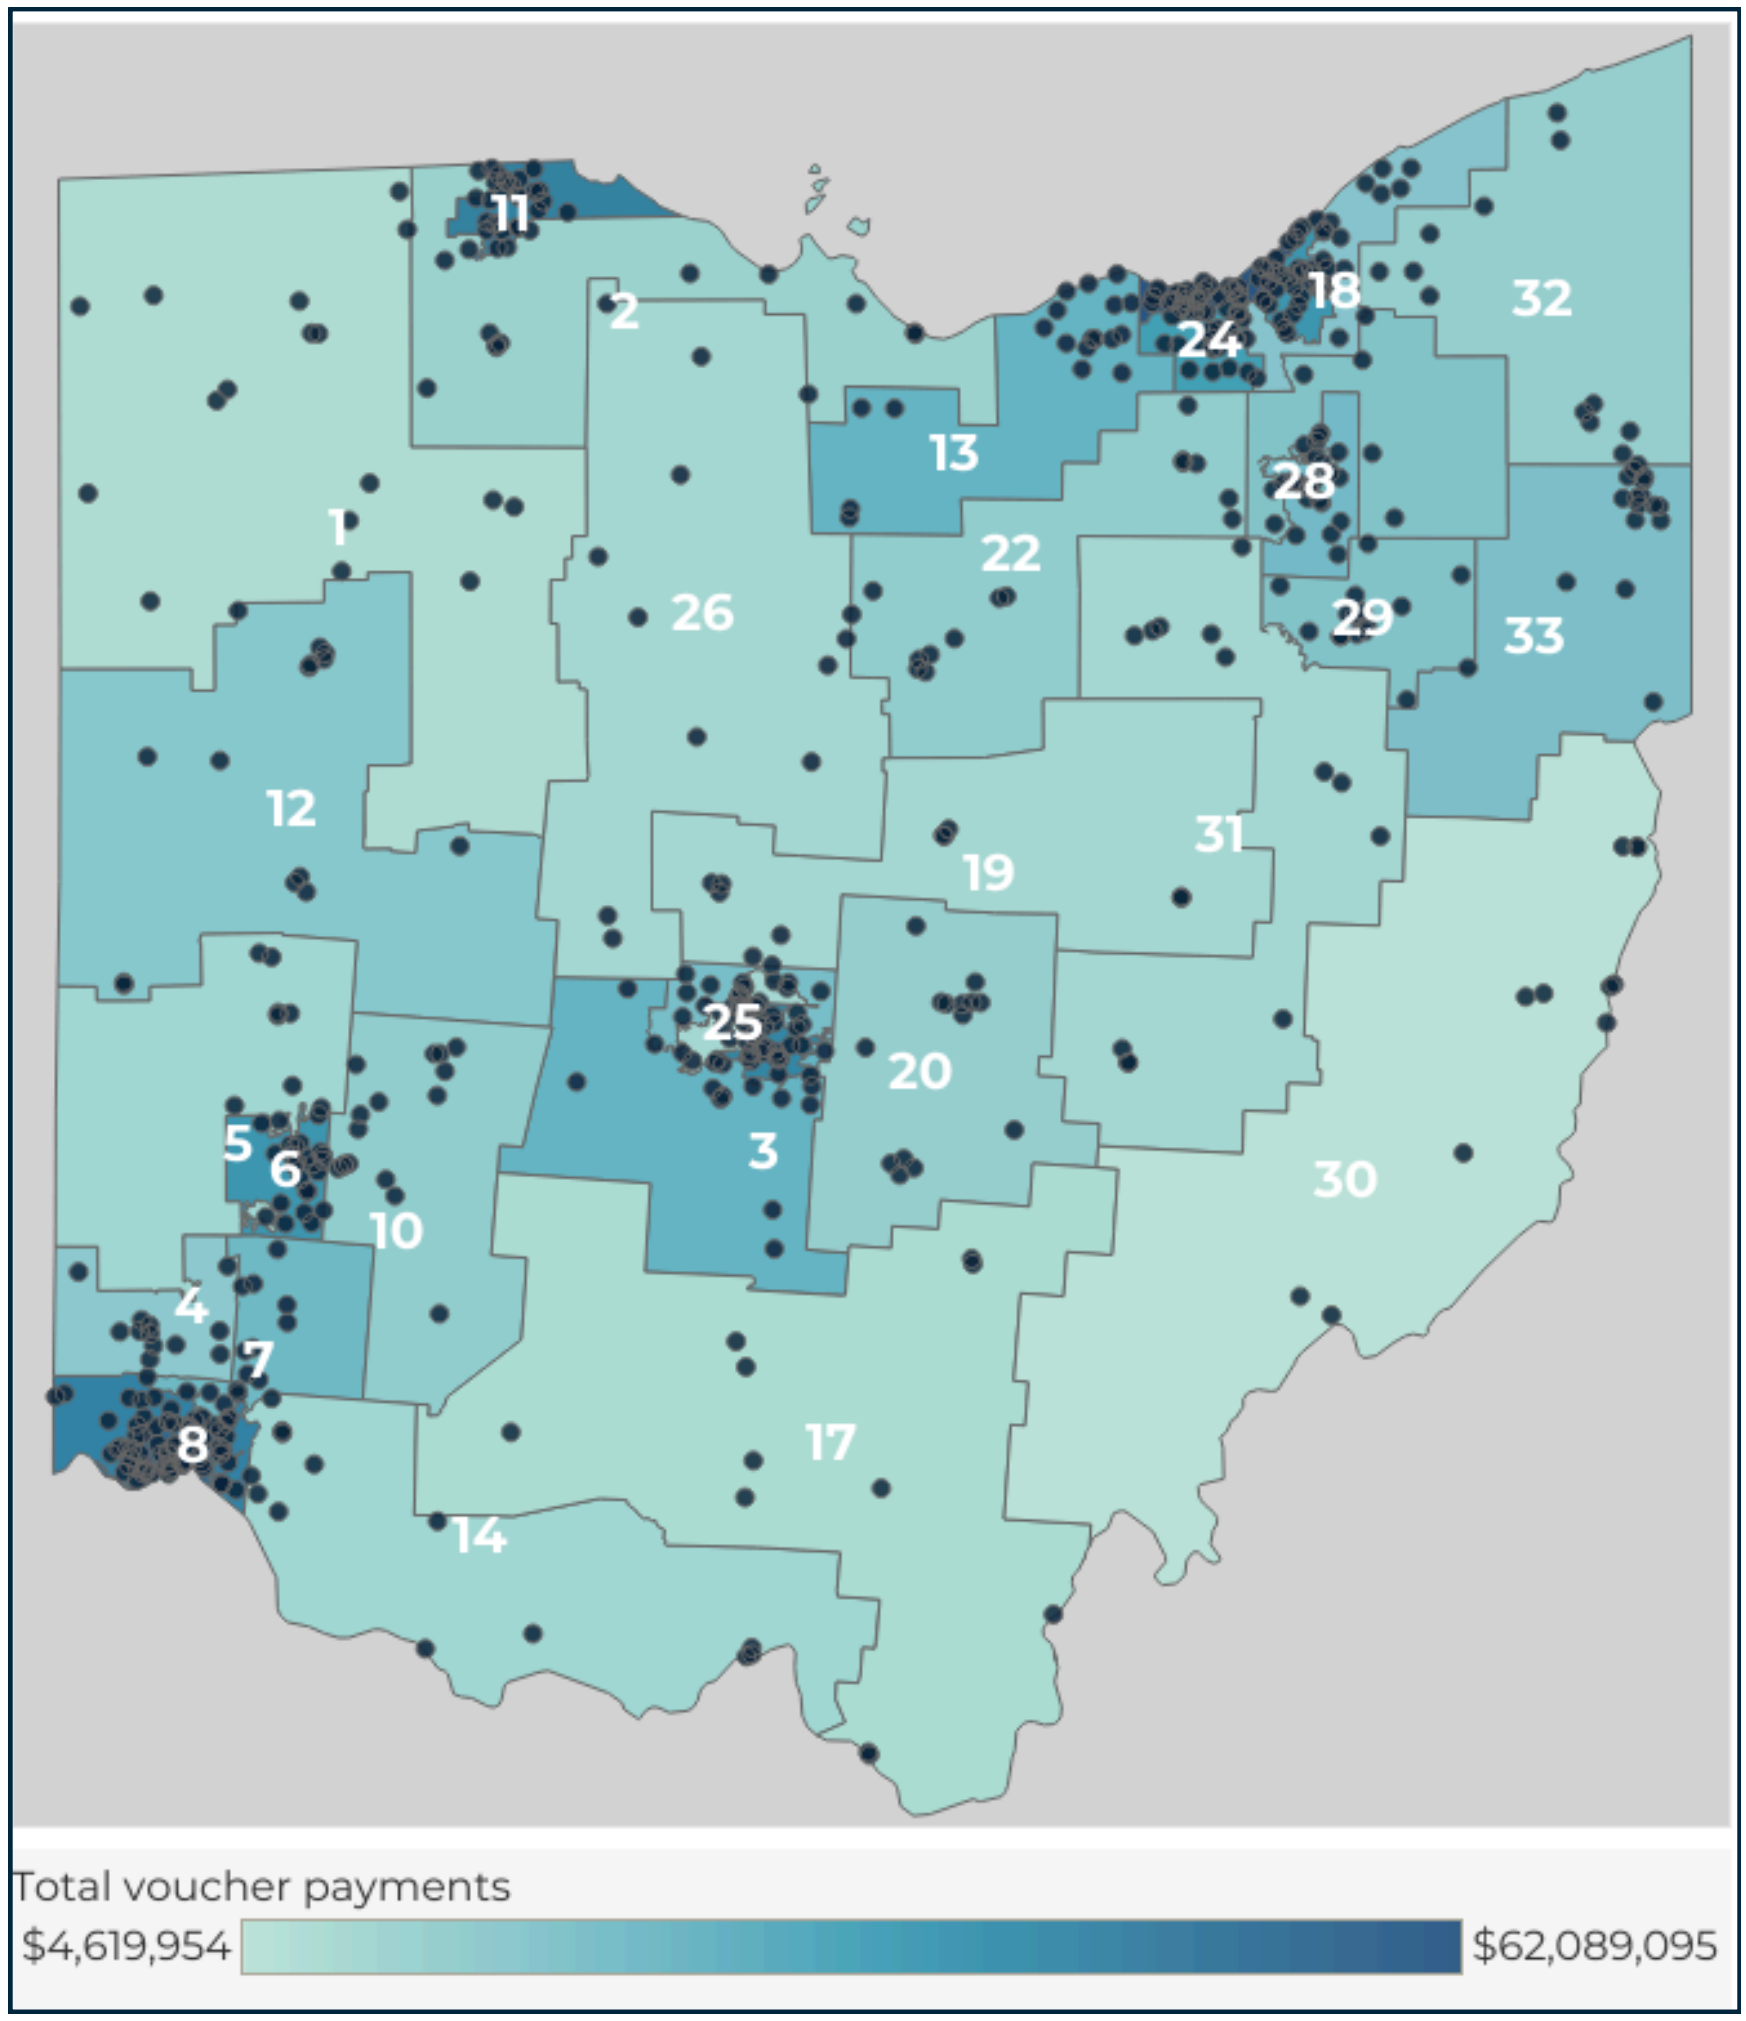

Email them at romanchuk@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-7505

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 23

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 23 there are

41

private voucher schools attended by 11,156

voucher students.

In District 23 there are 94

public schools attended by 36,531

students.

Contact Senator Antonio and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

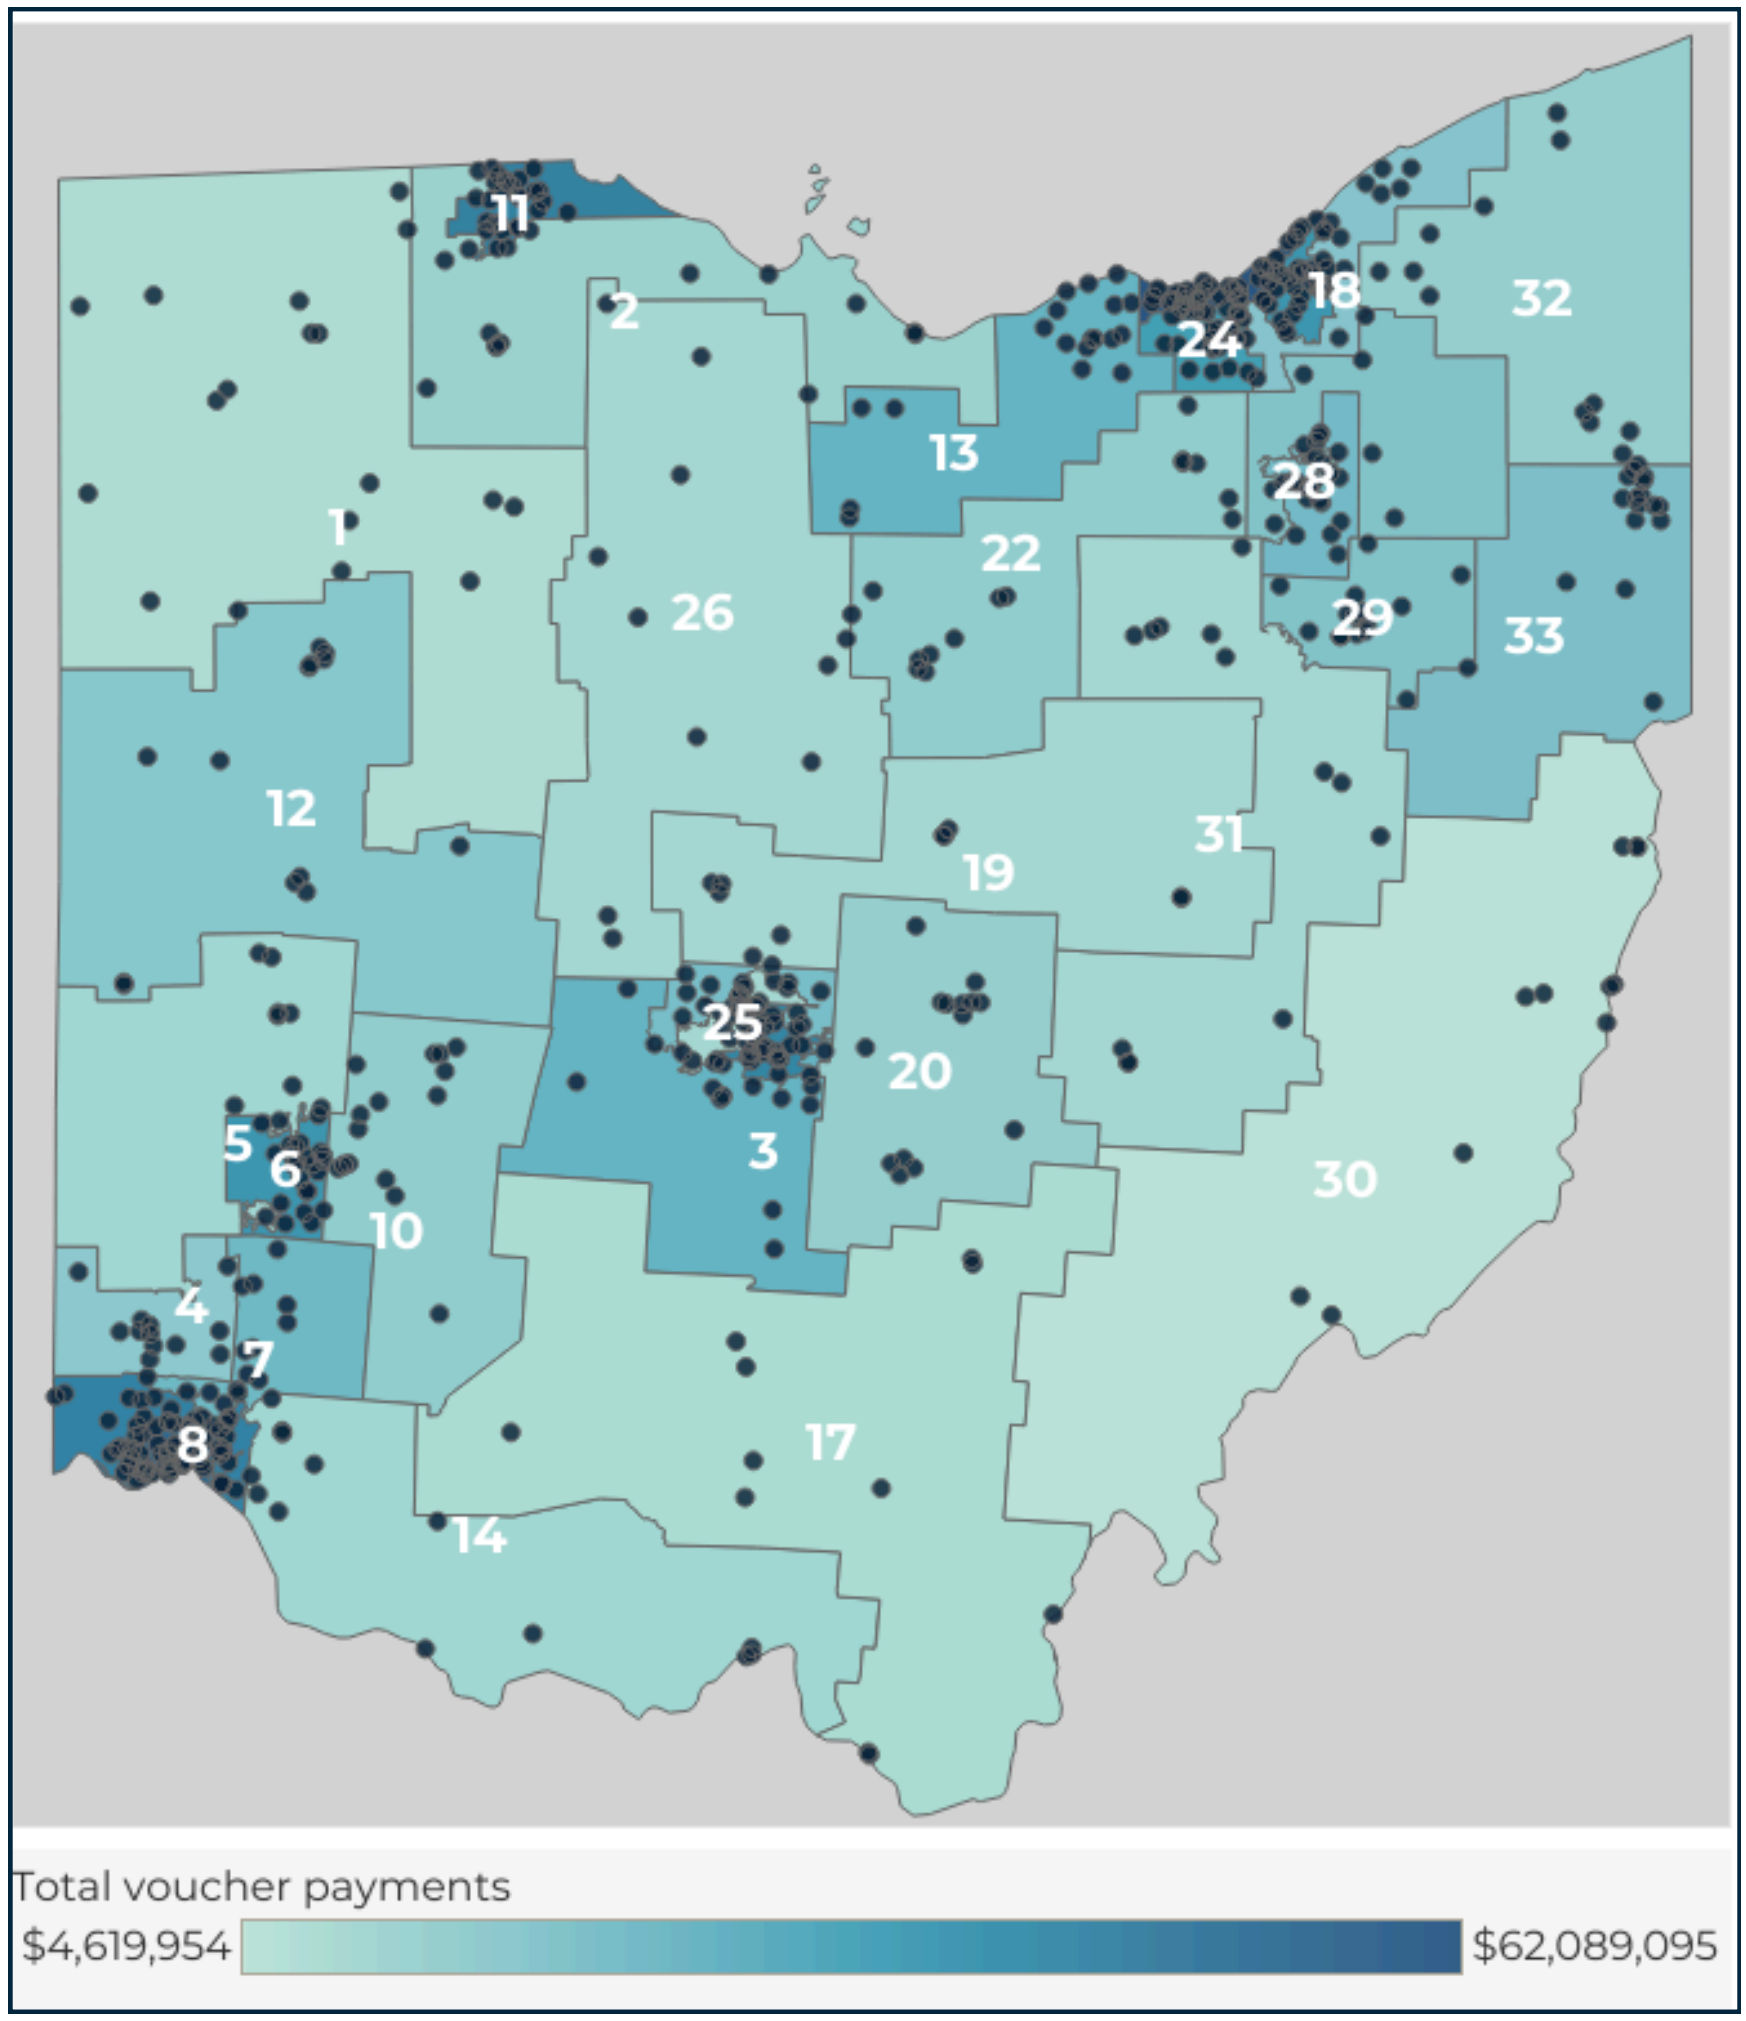

Email them at antonio@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-5123

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 24

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 24 there are

26

private voucher schools attended by 6,704

voucher students.

In District 24 there are

51

public schools attended by 35,734

students.

Contact Senator Patton and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

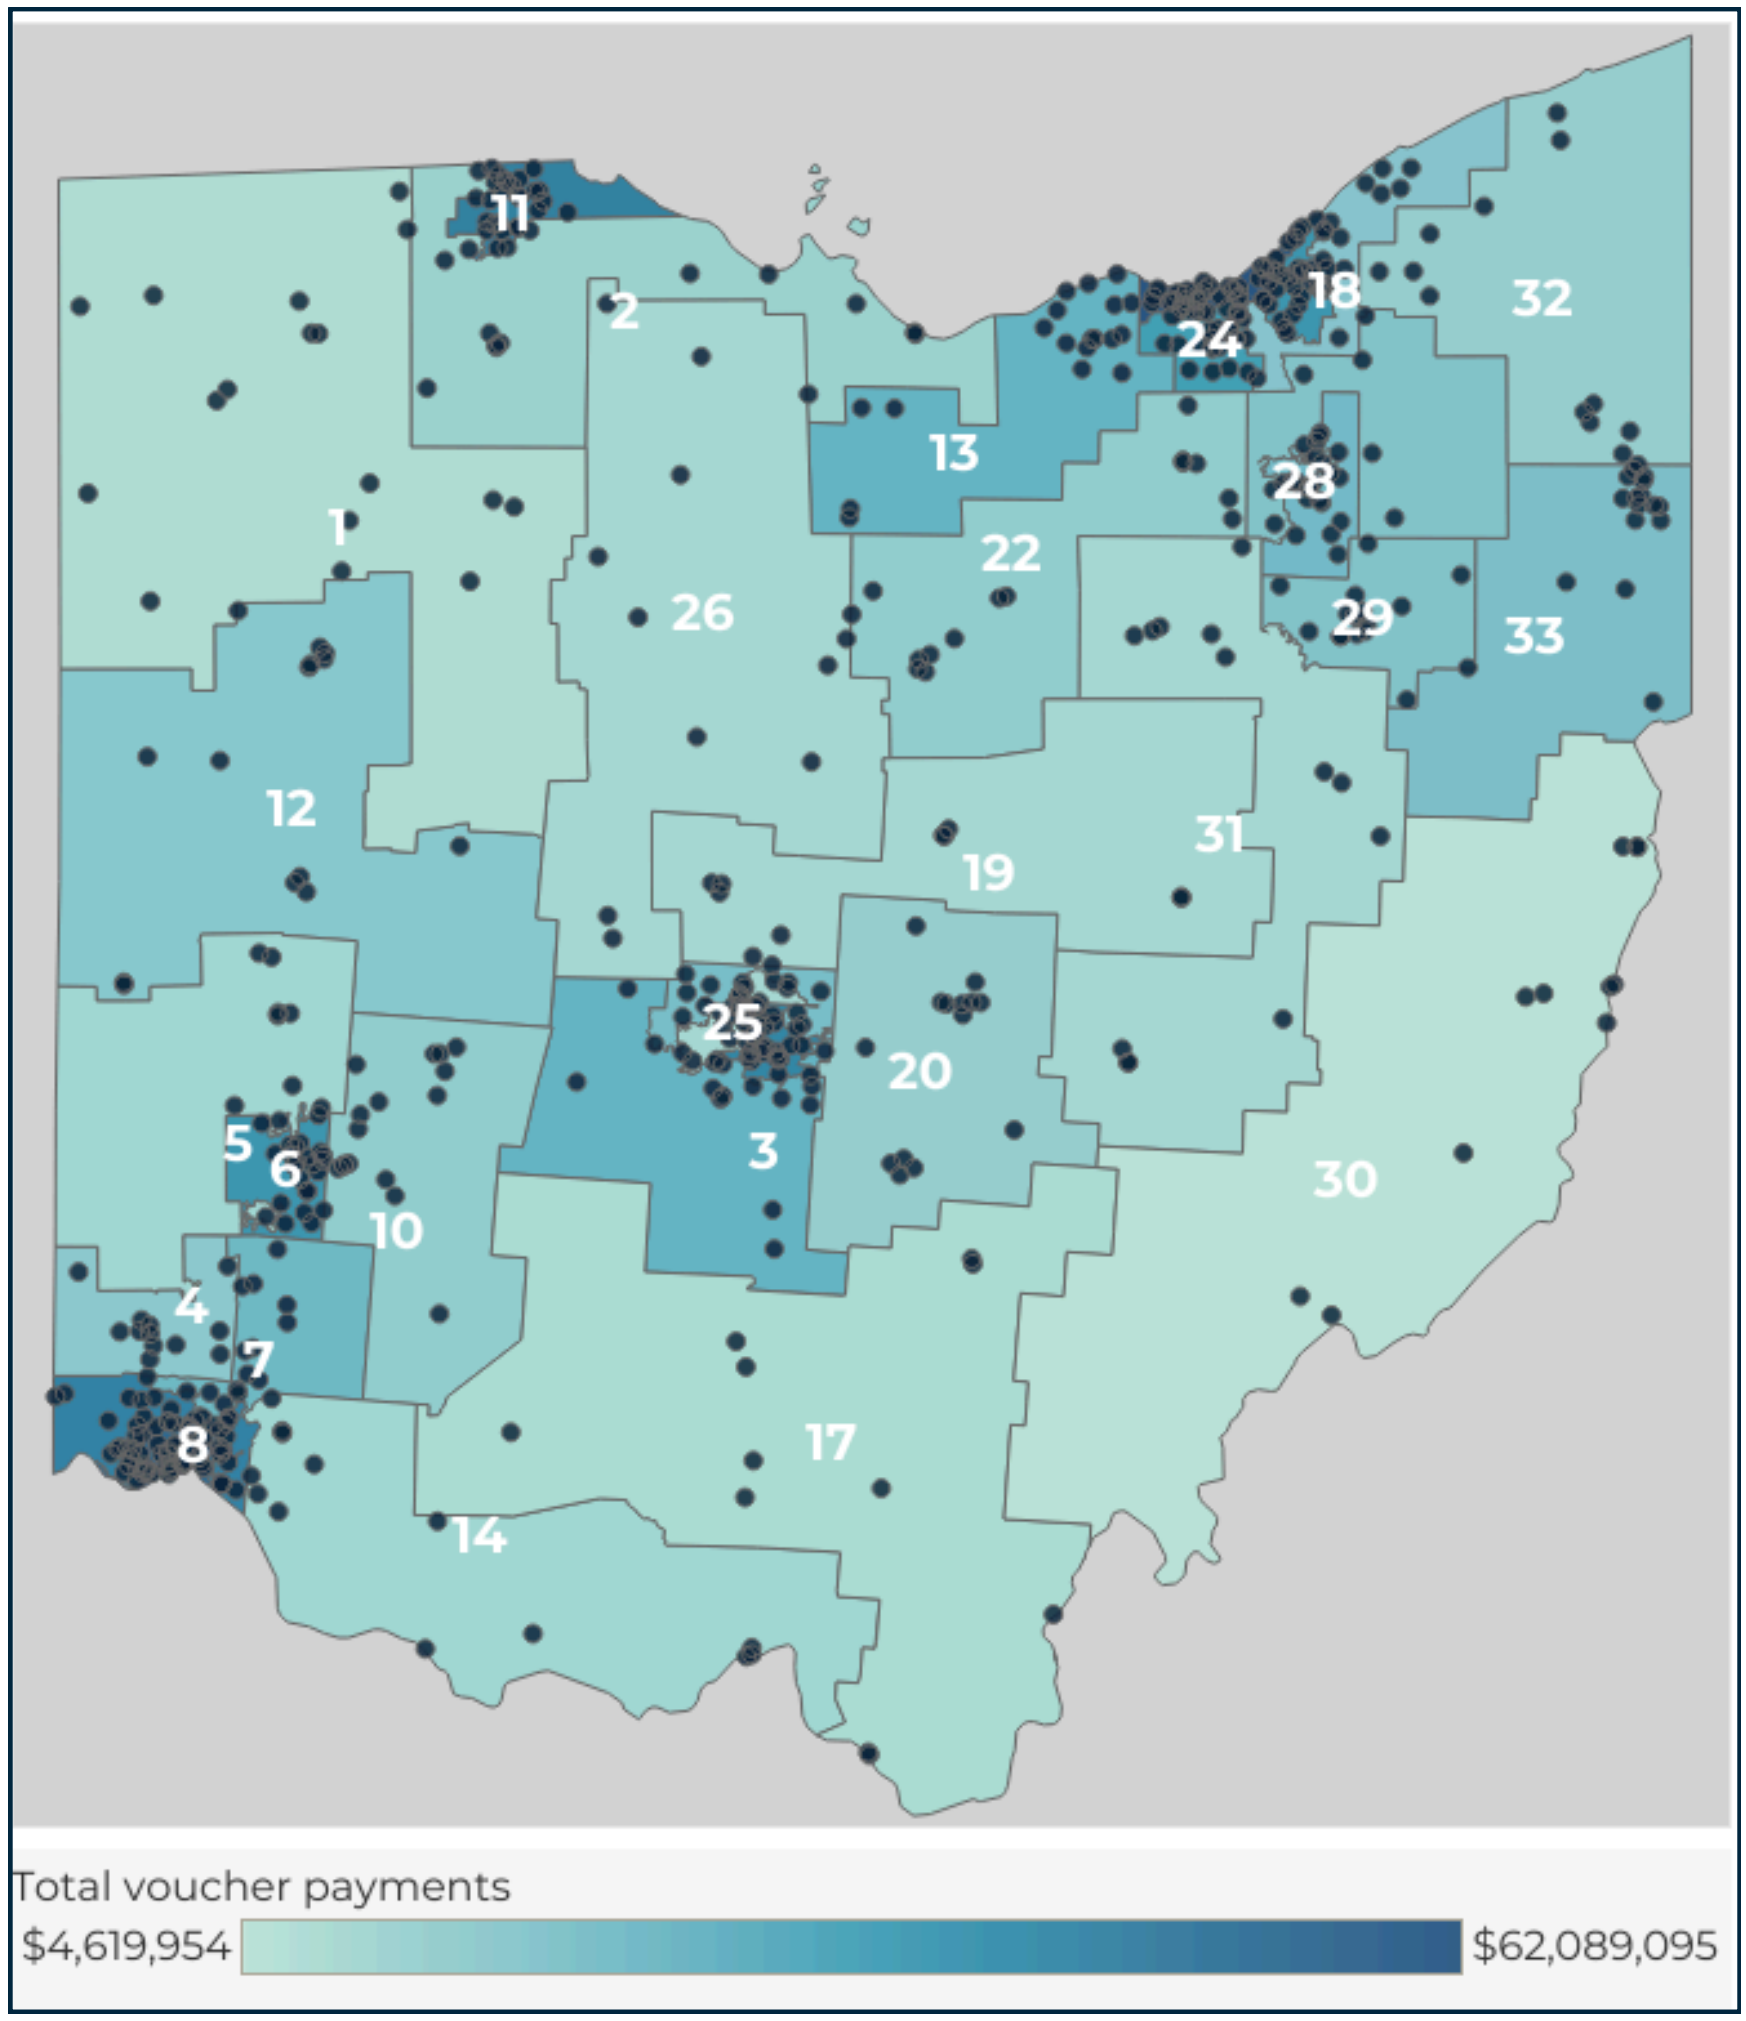

Email them at patton@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8056

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 25

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 25 there are

9

private voucher schools attended by

1,942

voucher students.

In District 25 there are

55

public schools attended by

27,974

students.

Contact Senator DeMora and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

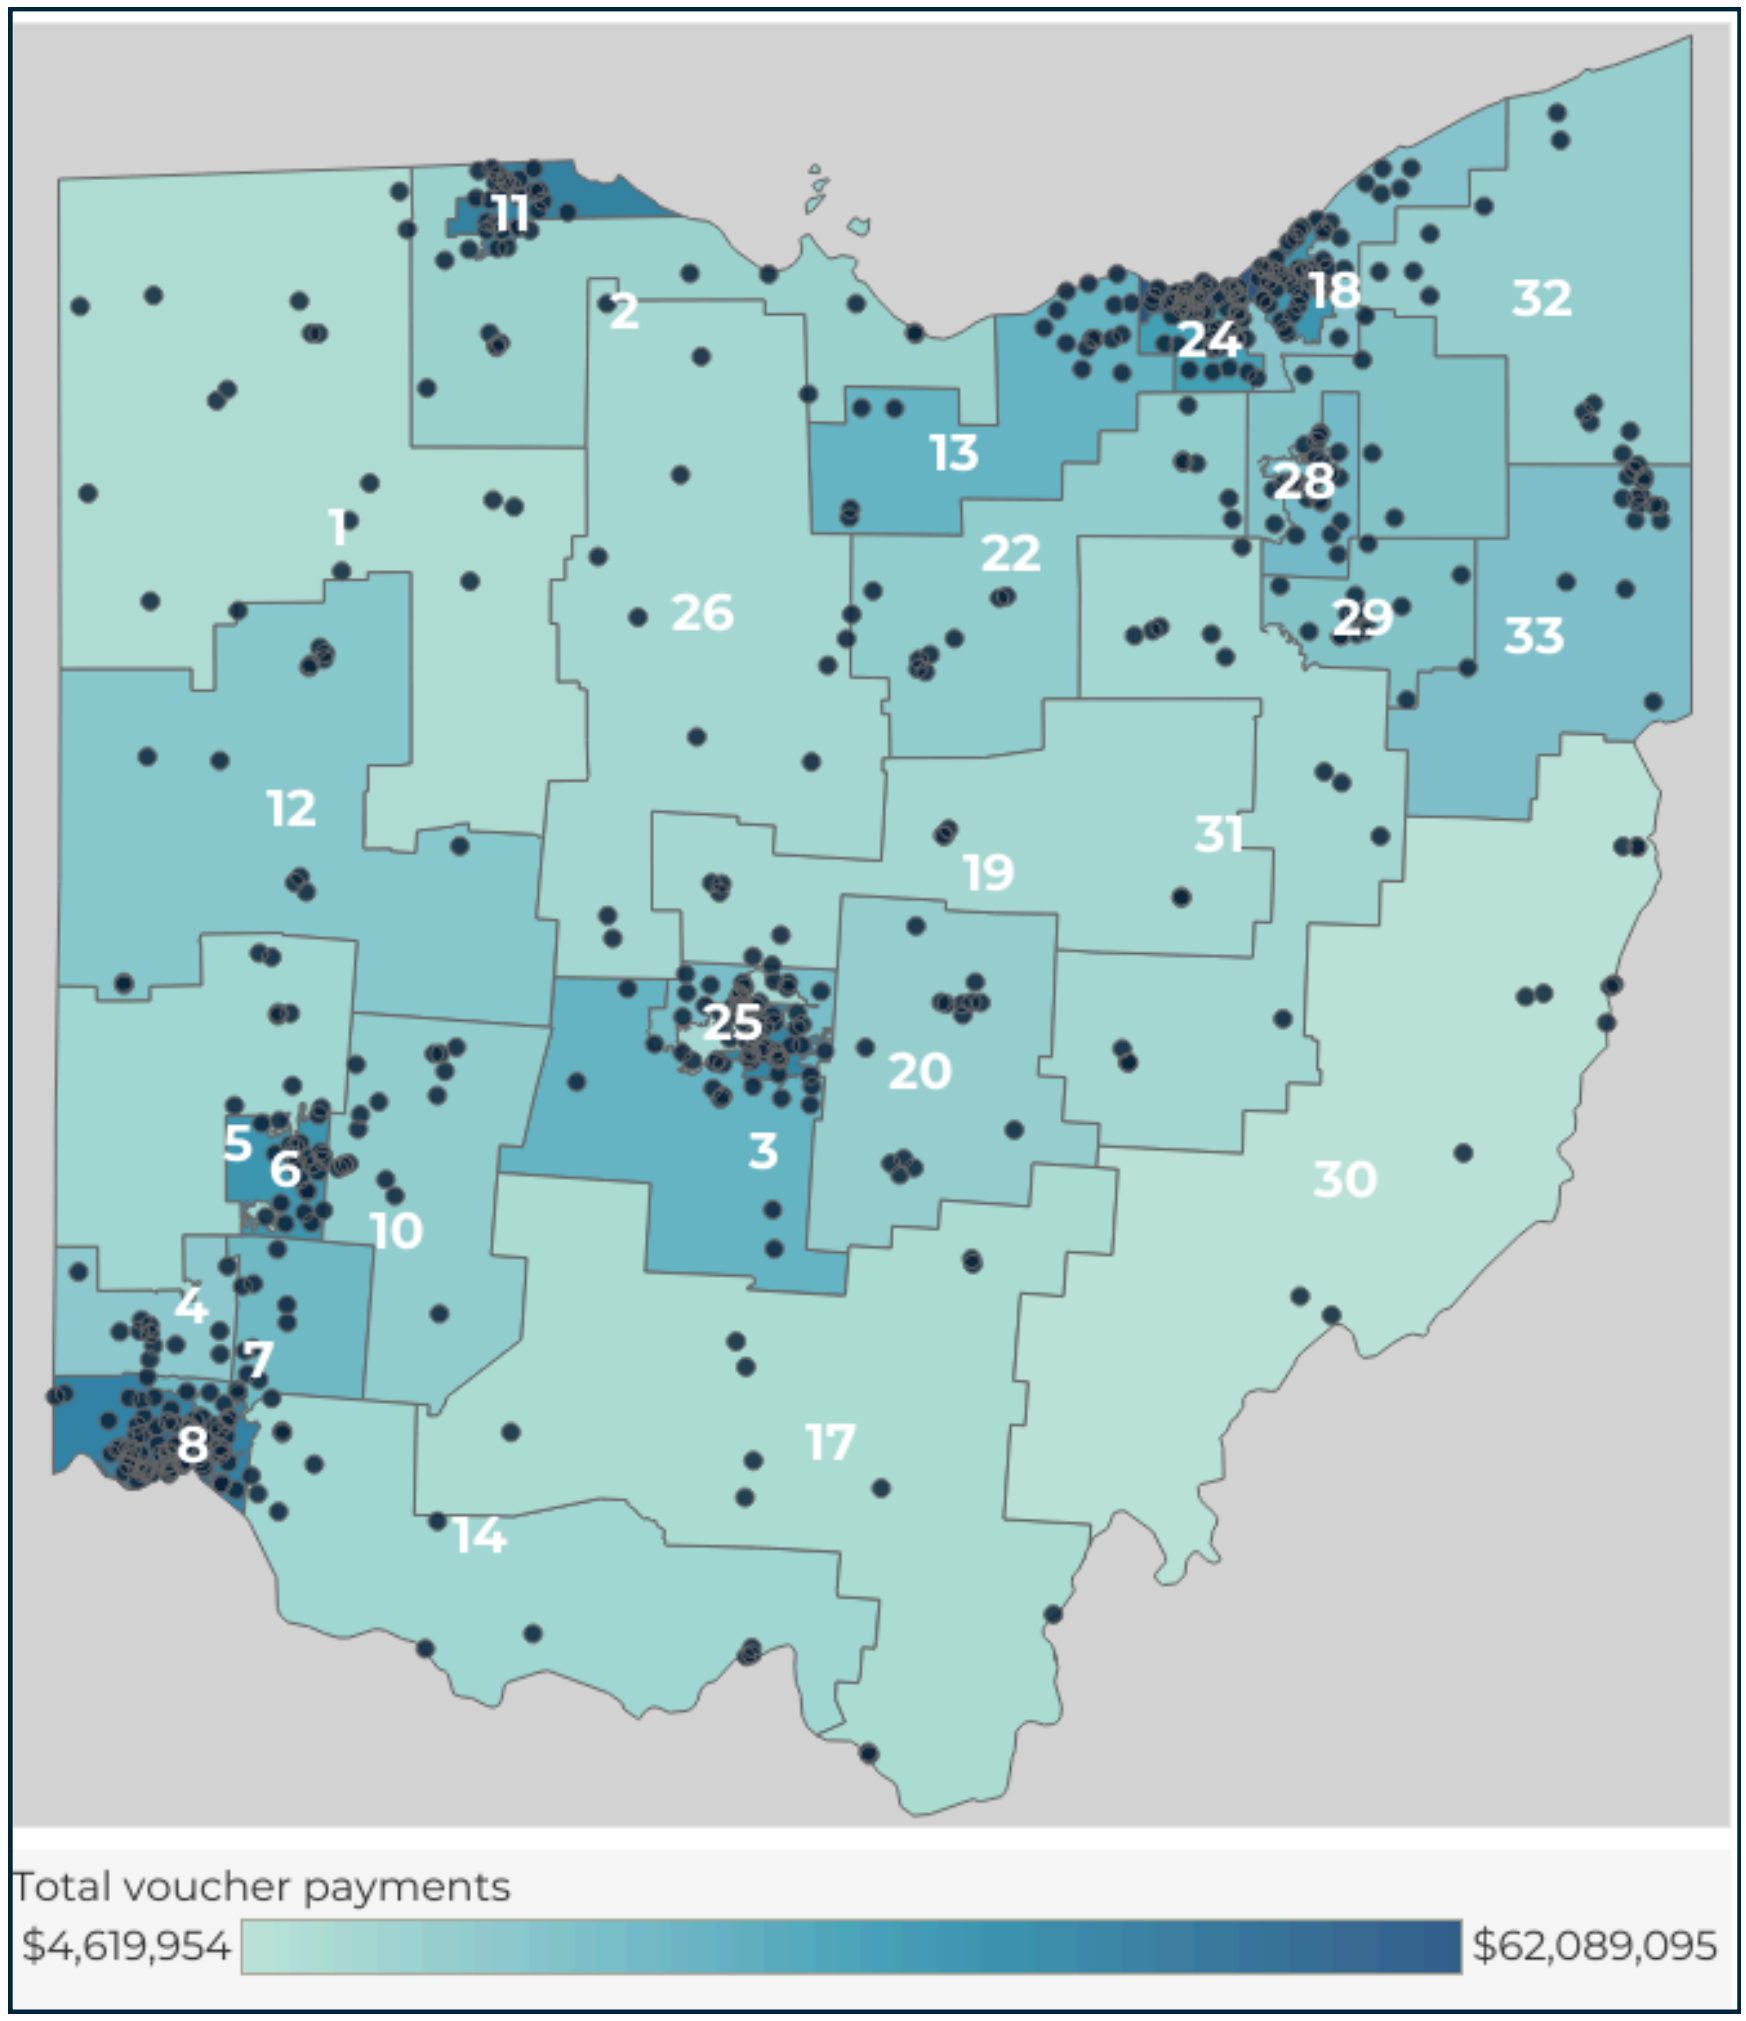

Email them at demora@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-4583

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 26

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 26 there are 11

private voucher schools attended by

1,796

voucher students.

In District 26 there are 115

public schools attended by 47,174

students.

Contact Senator Reineke and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

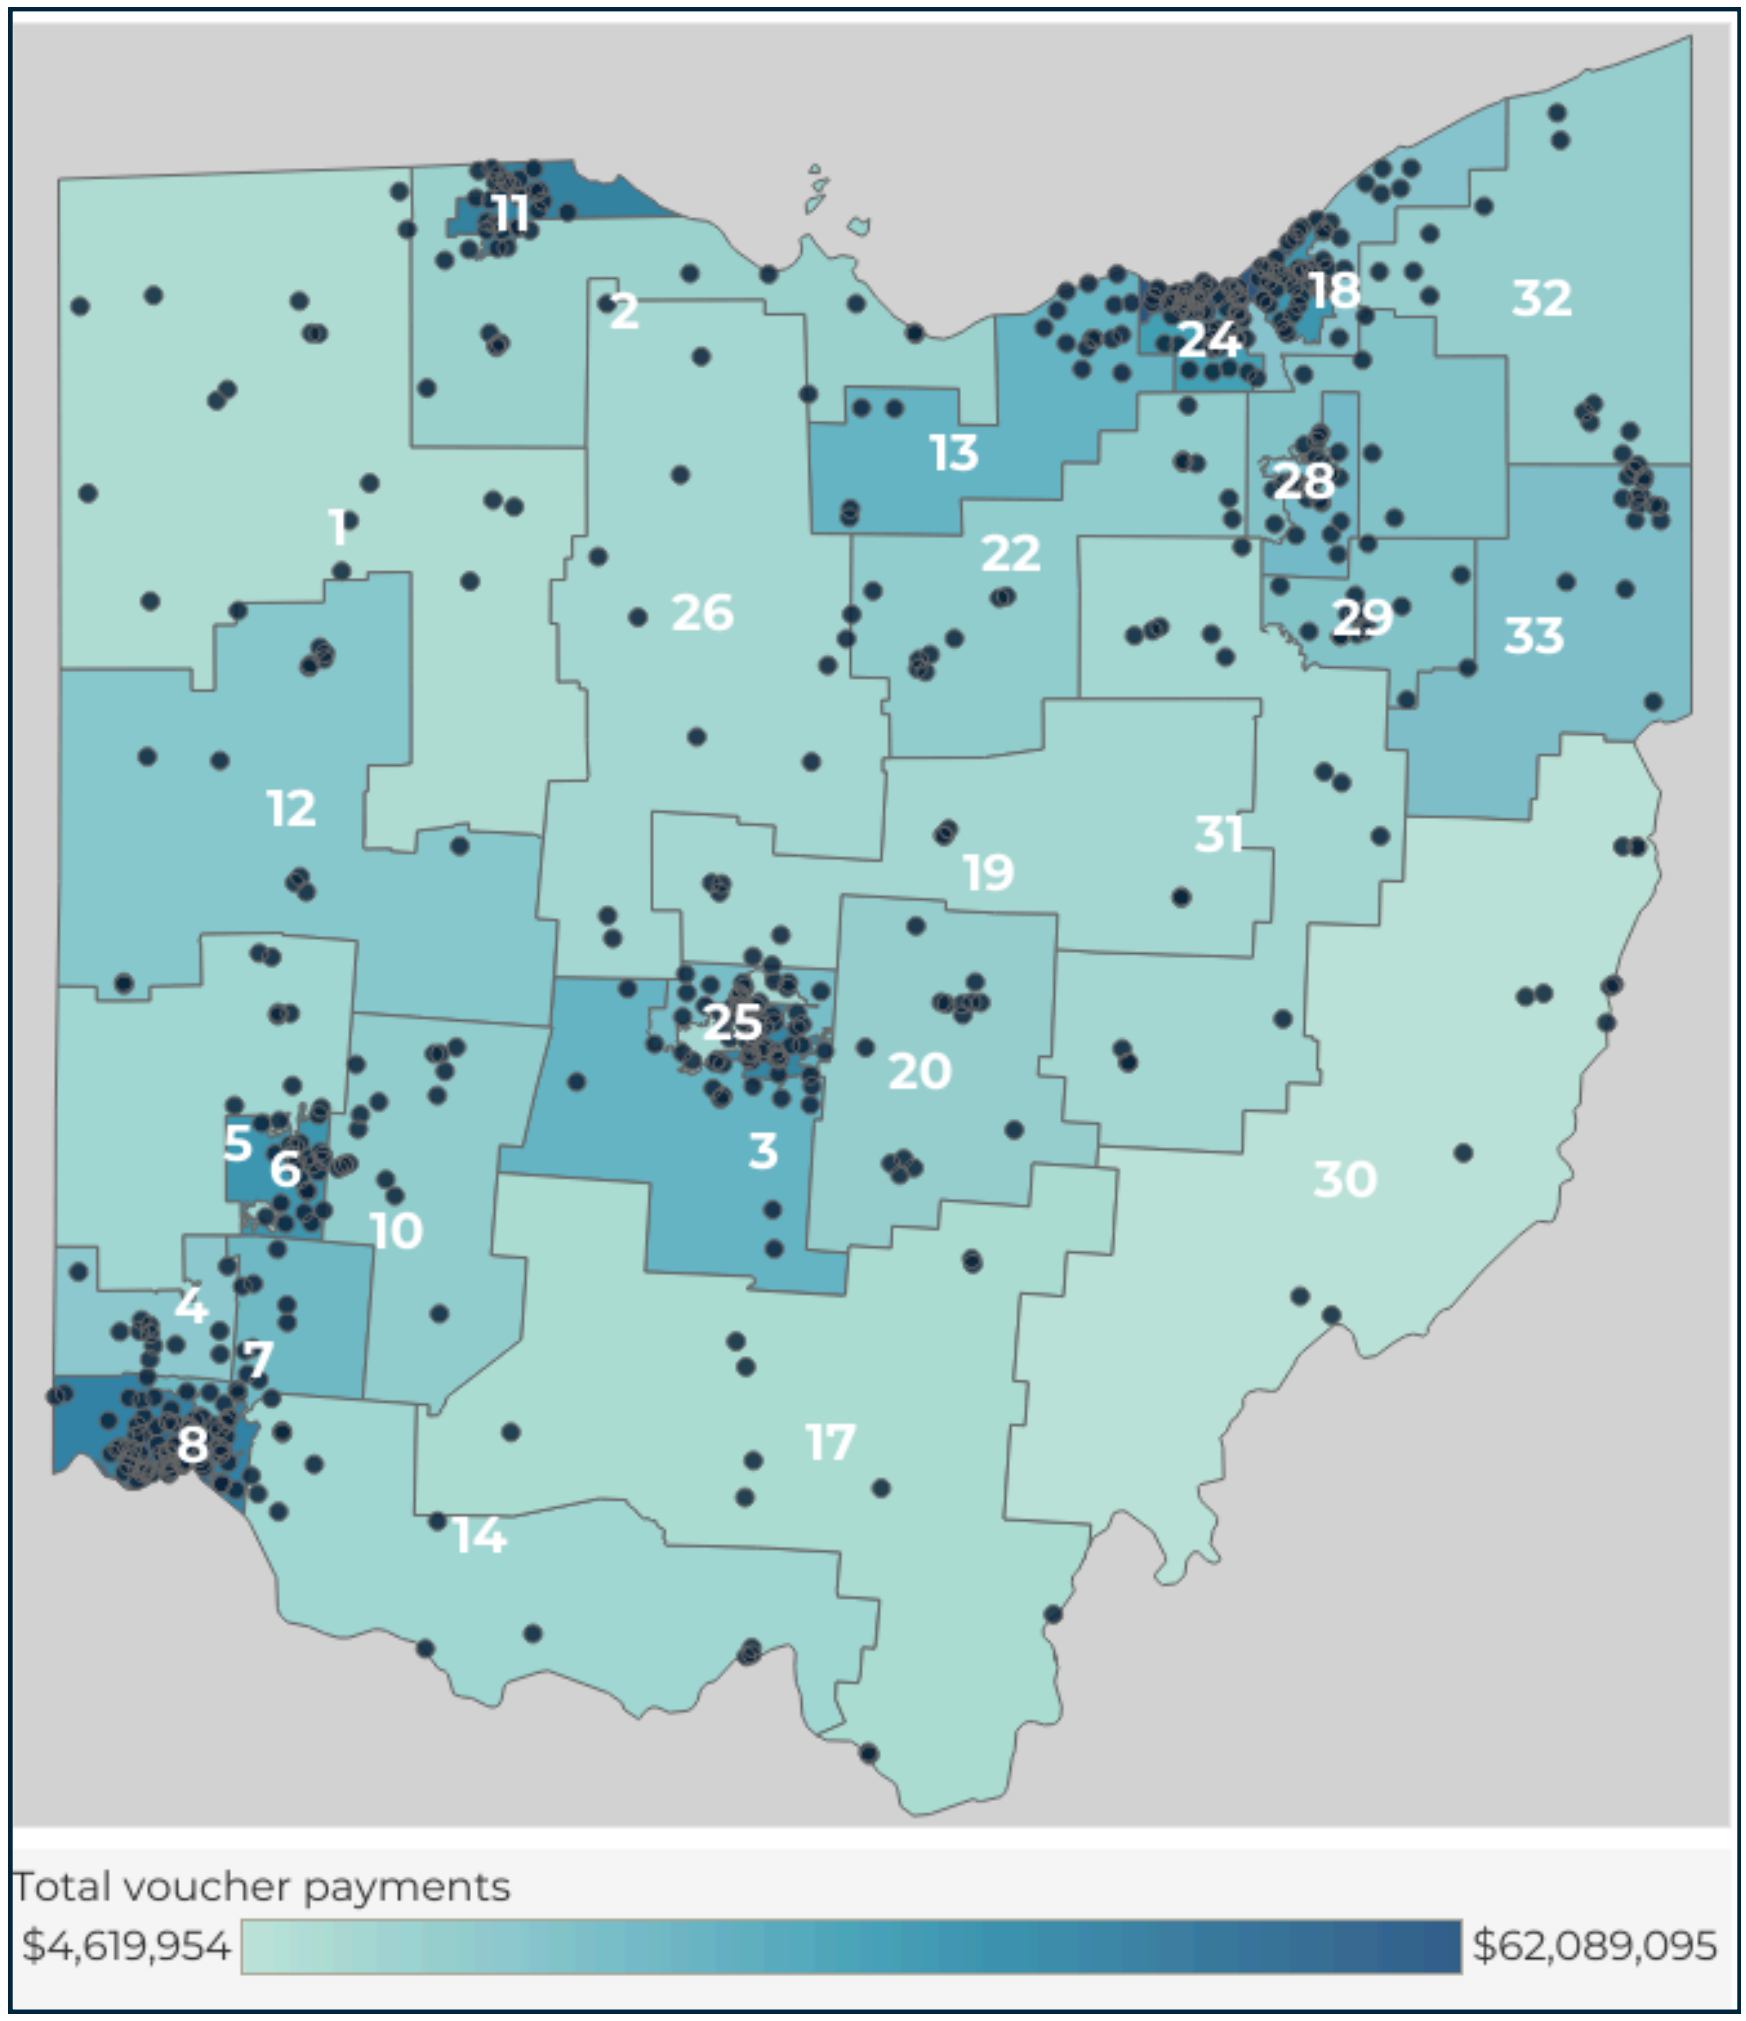

Email them at reineke@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8049

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 27

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 27 there are

13

private voucher schools attended by 3,668

voucher students.

In District 27 there are

89

public schools attended by

44,082

students.

Contact Senator Roegner and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

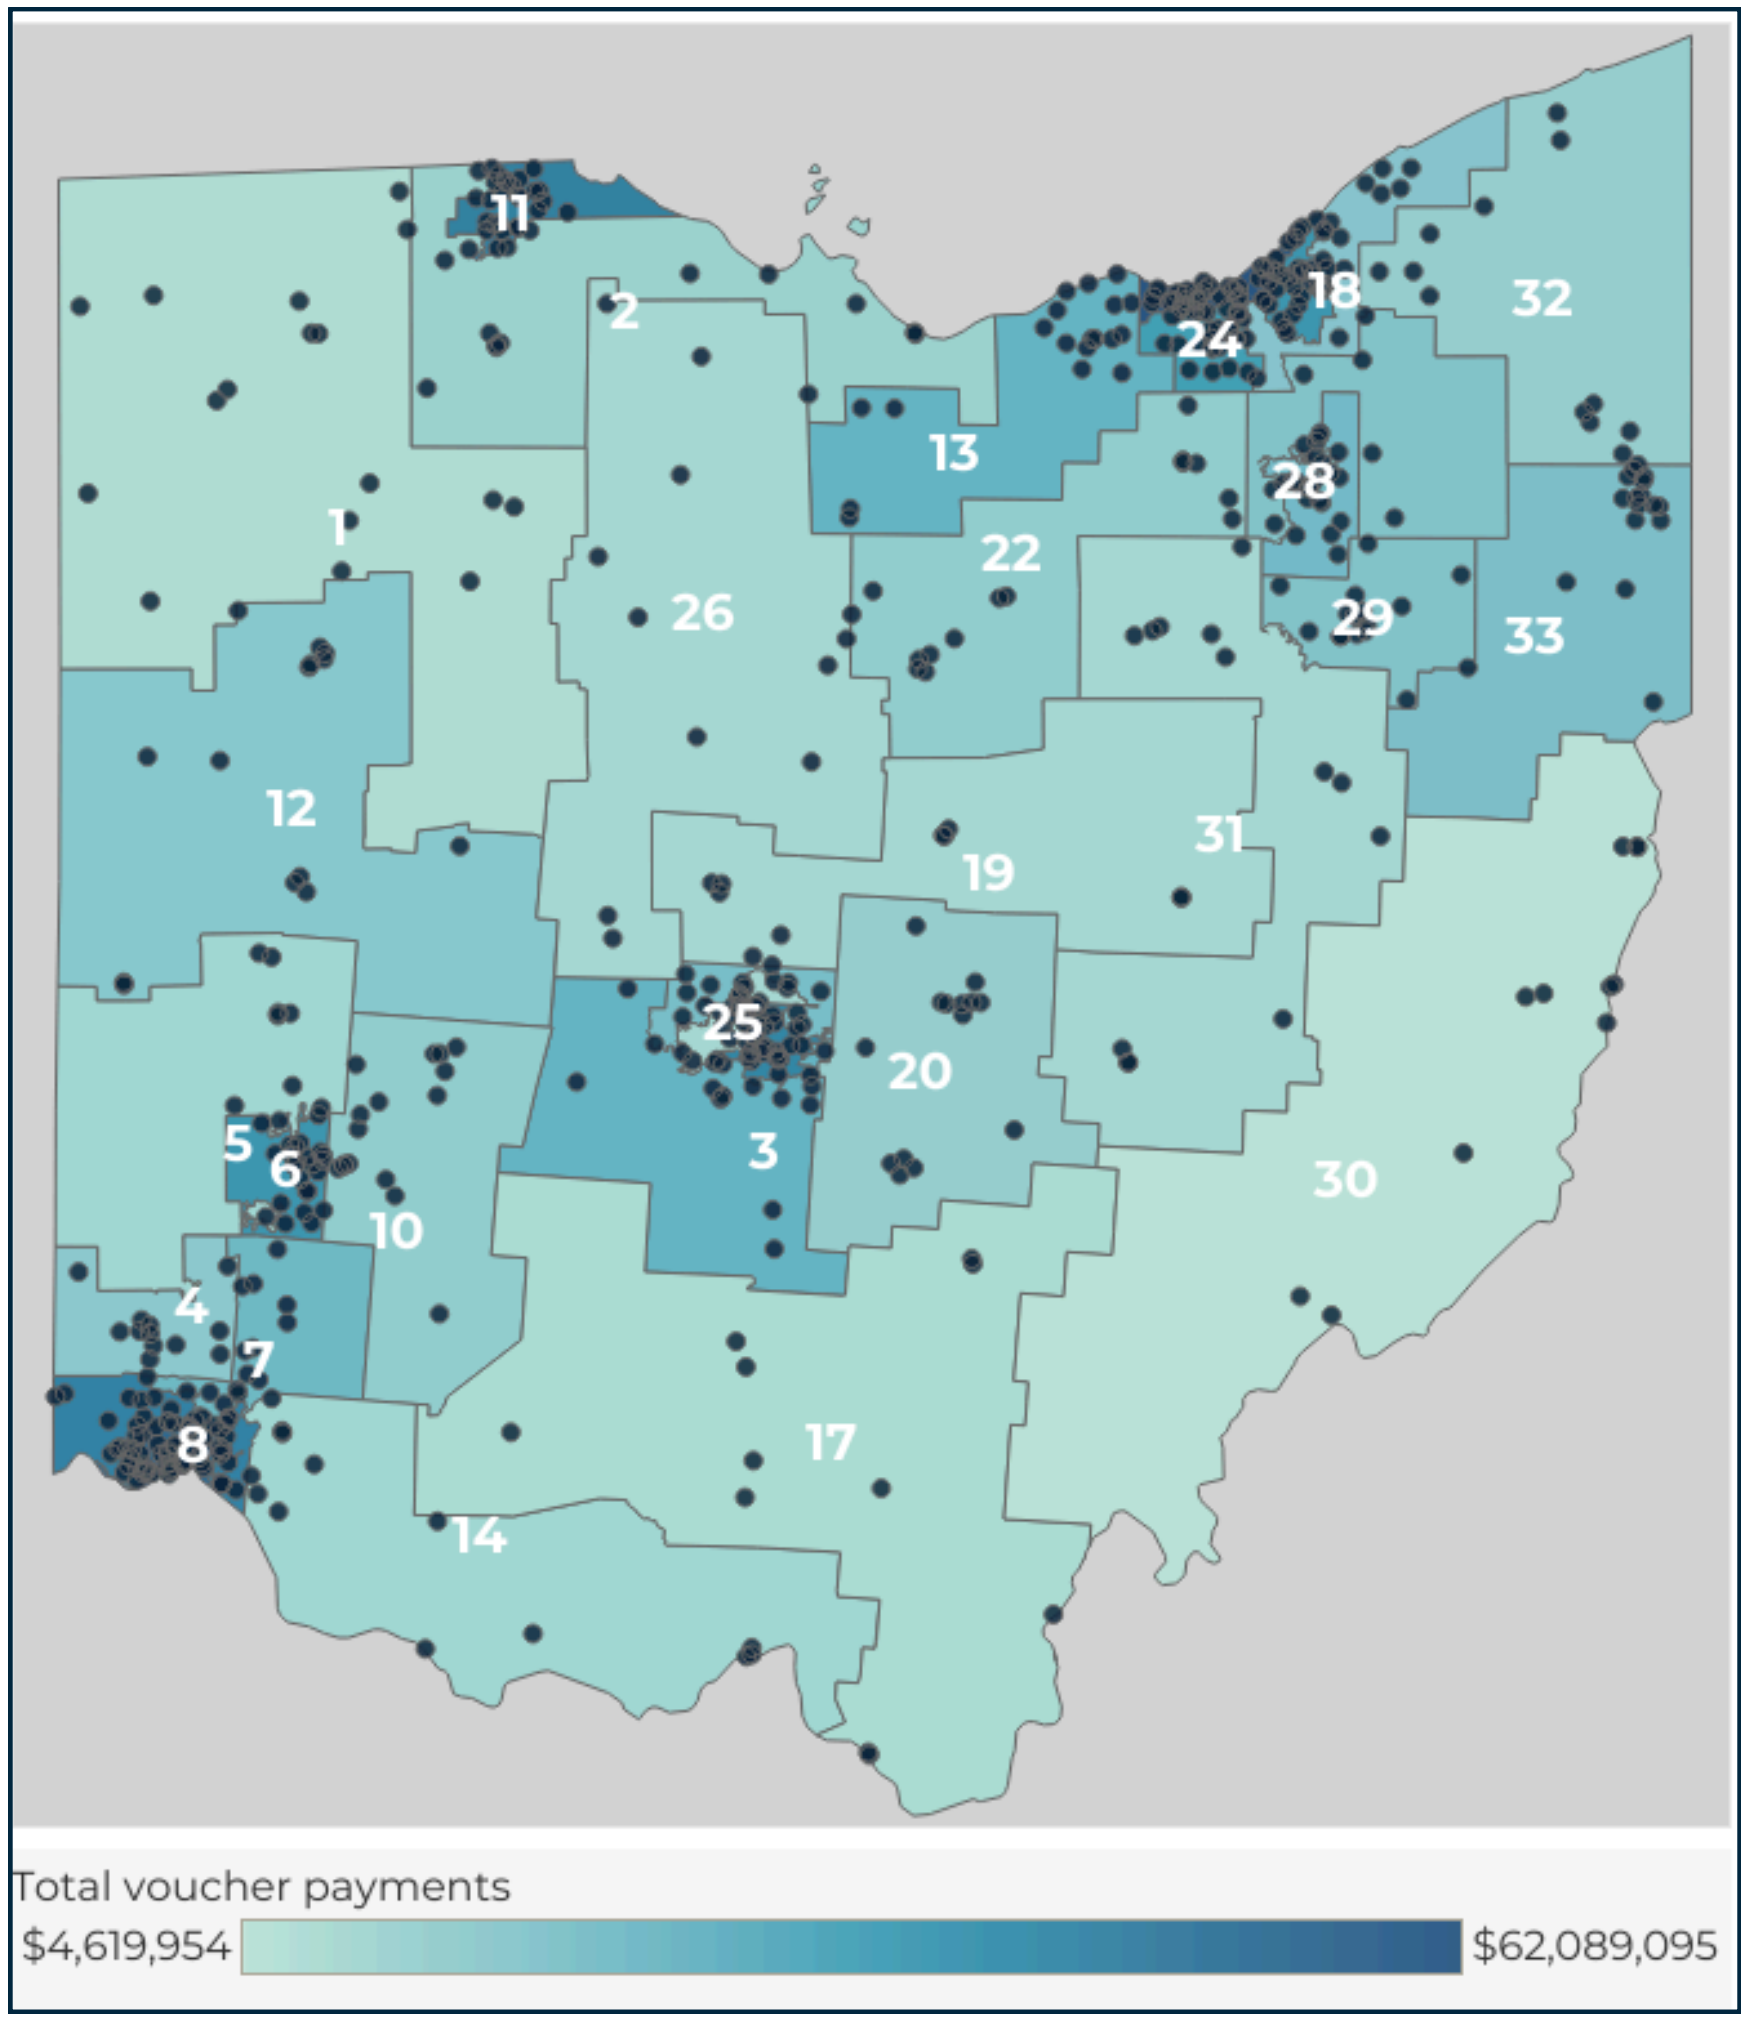

Email them at roegner@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-4823

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 28

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 28 there are 16

private voucher schools attended by 3,758

voucher students.

In District 28 there are 81

public schools attended by 41,120

students.

Contact Senator Weinstein and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

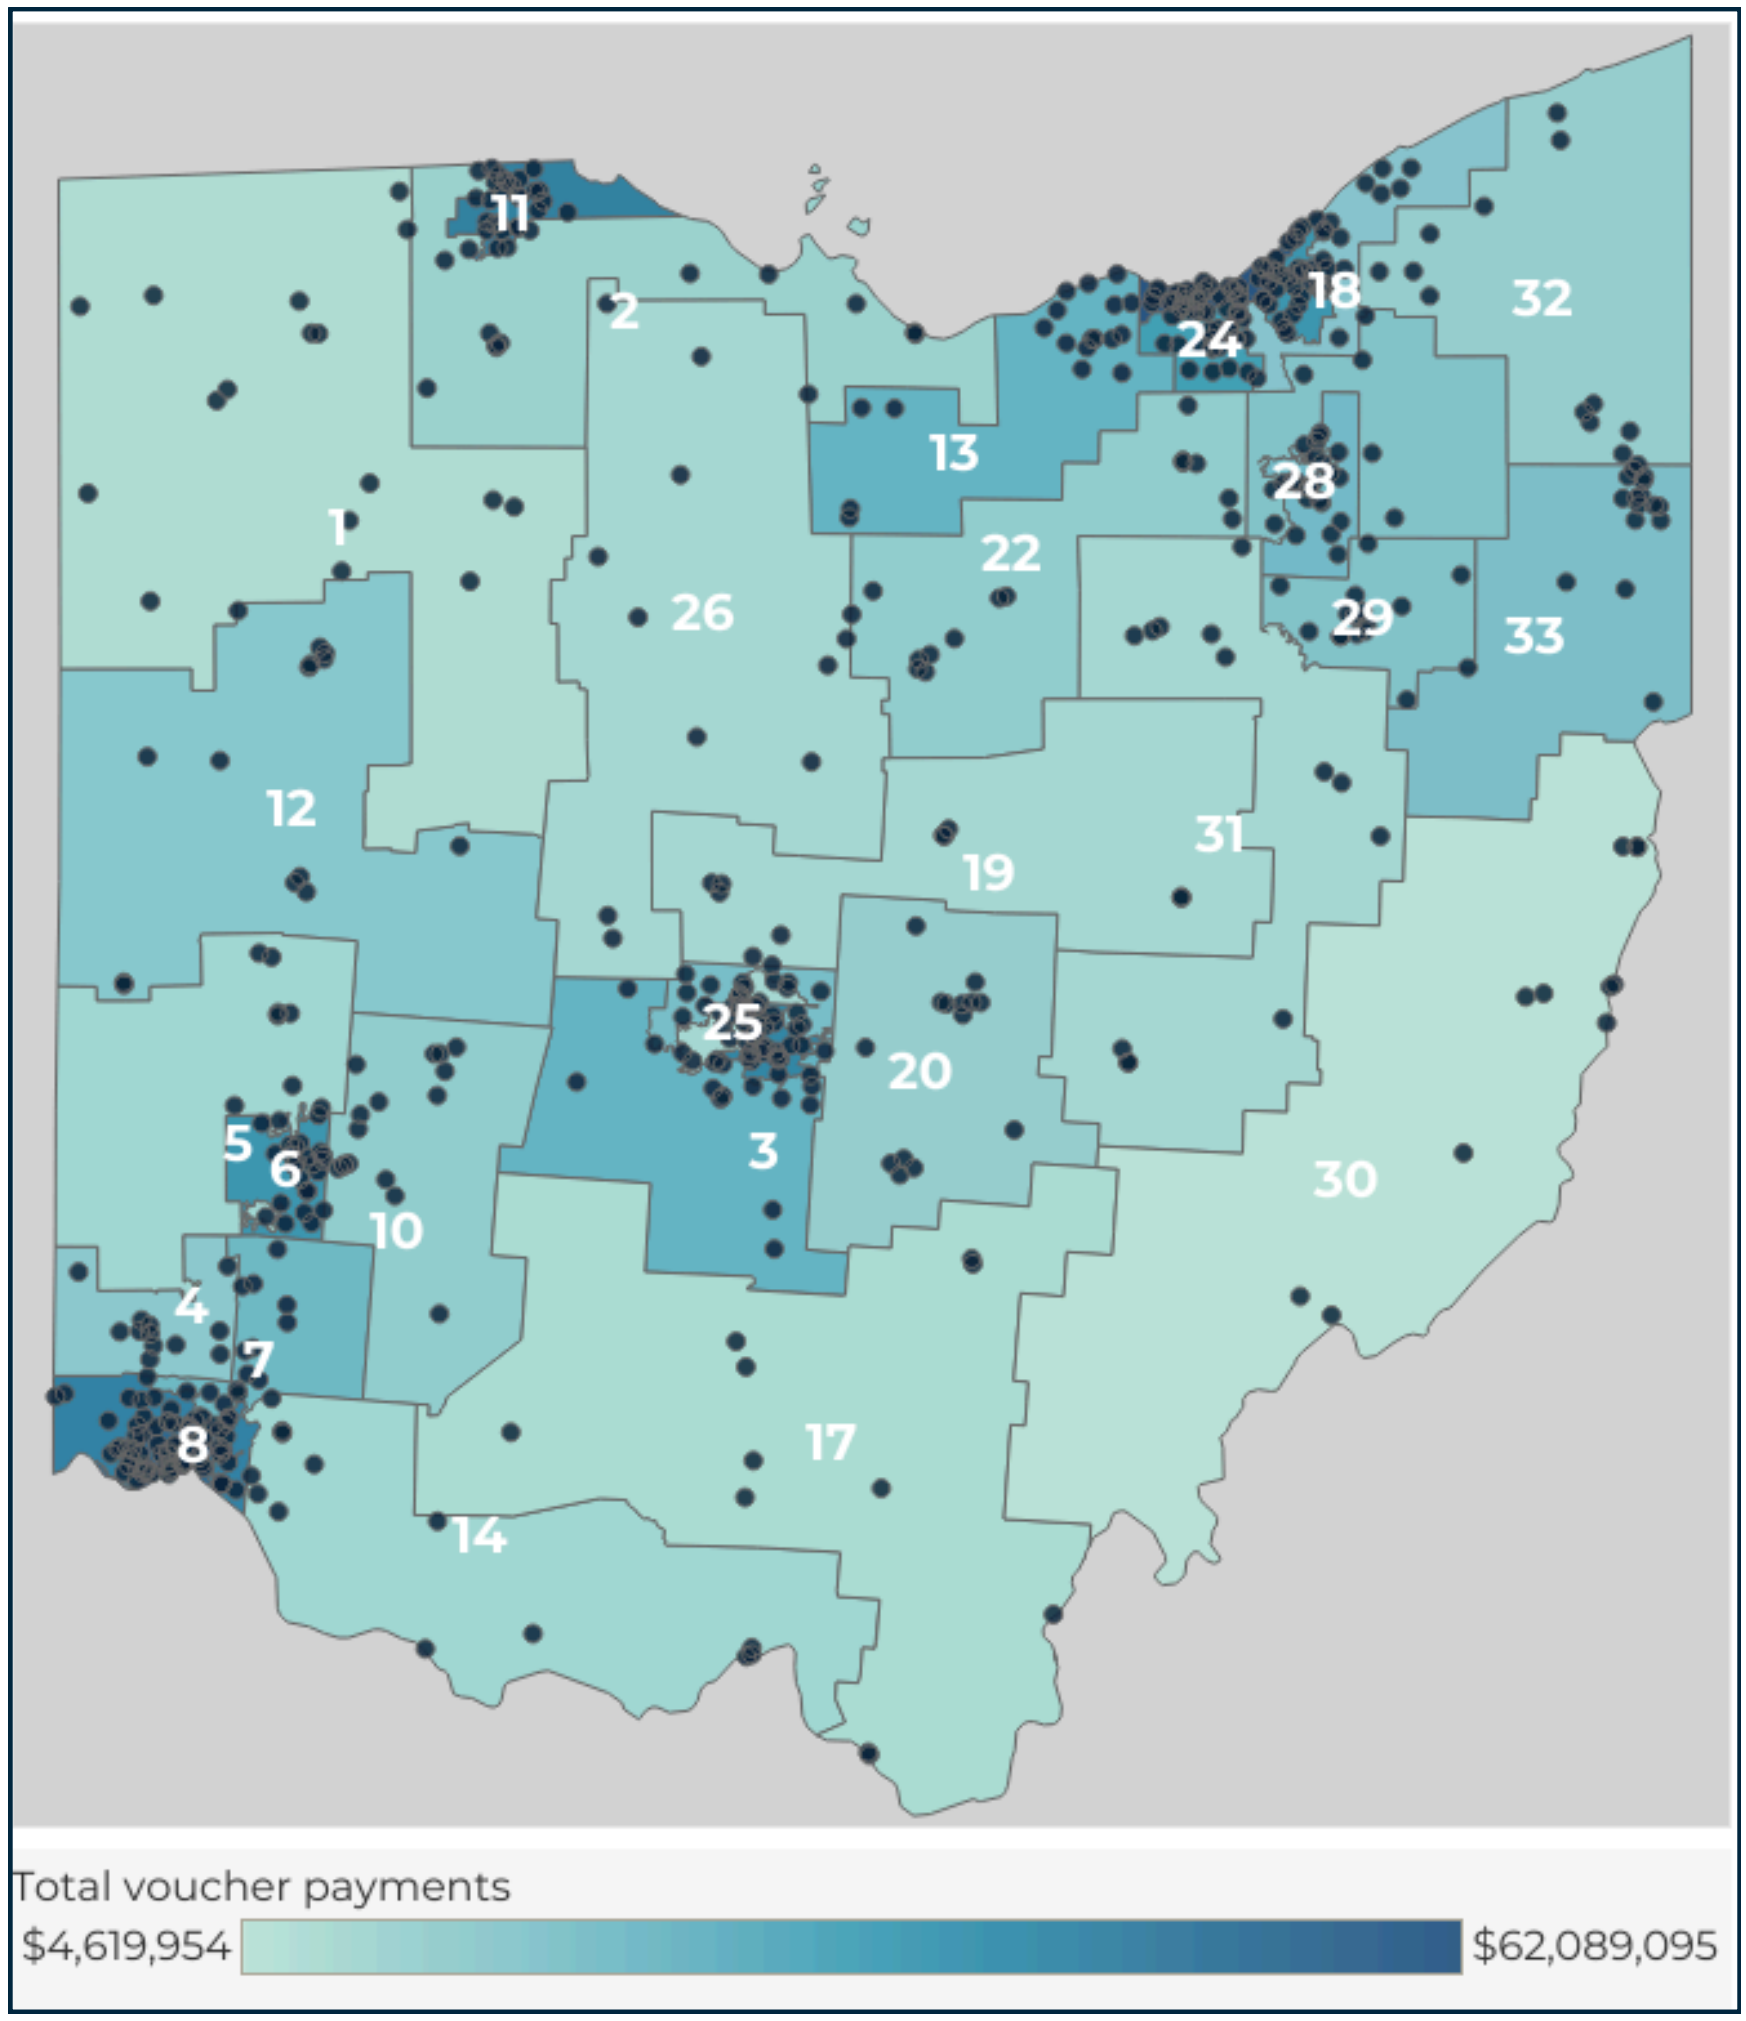

Email them at weinstein@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-7041

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 29

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 29 there are 16

private voucher schools attended by 3,415

voucher students.

In District 29 there are

80

public schools attended by 48,002

students.

Contact Vacancy and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

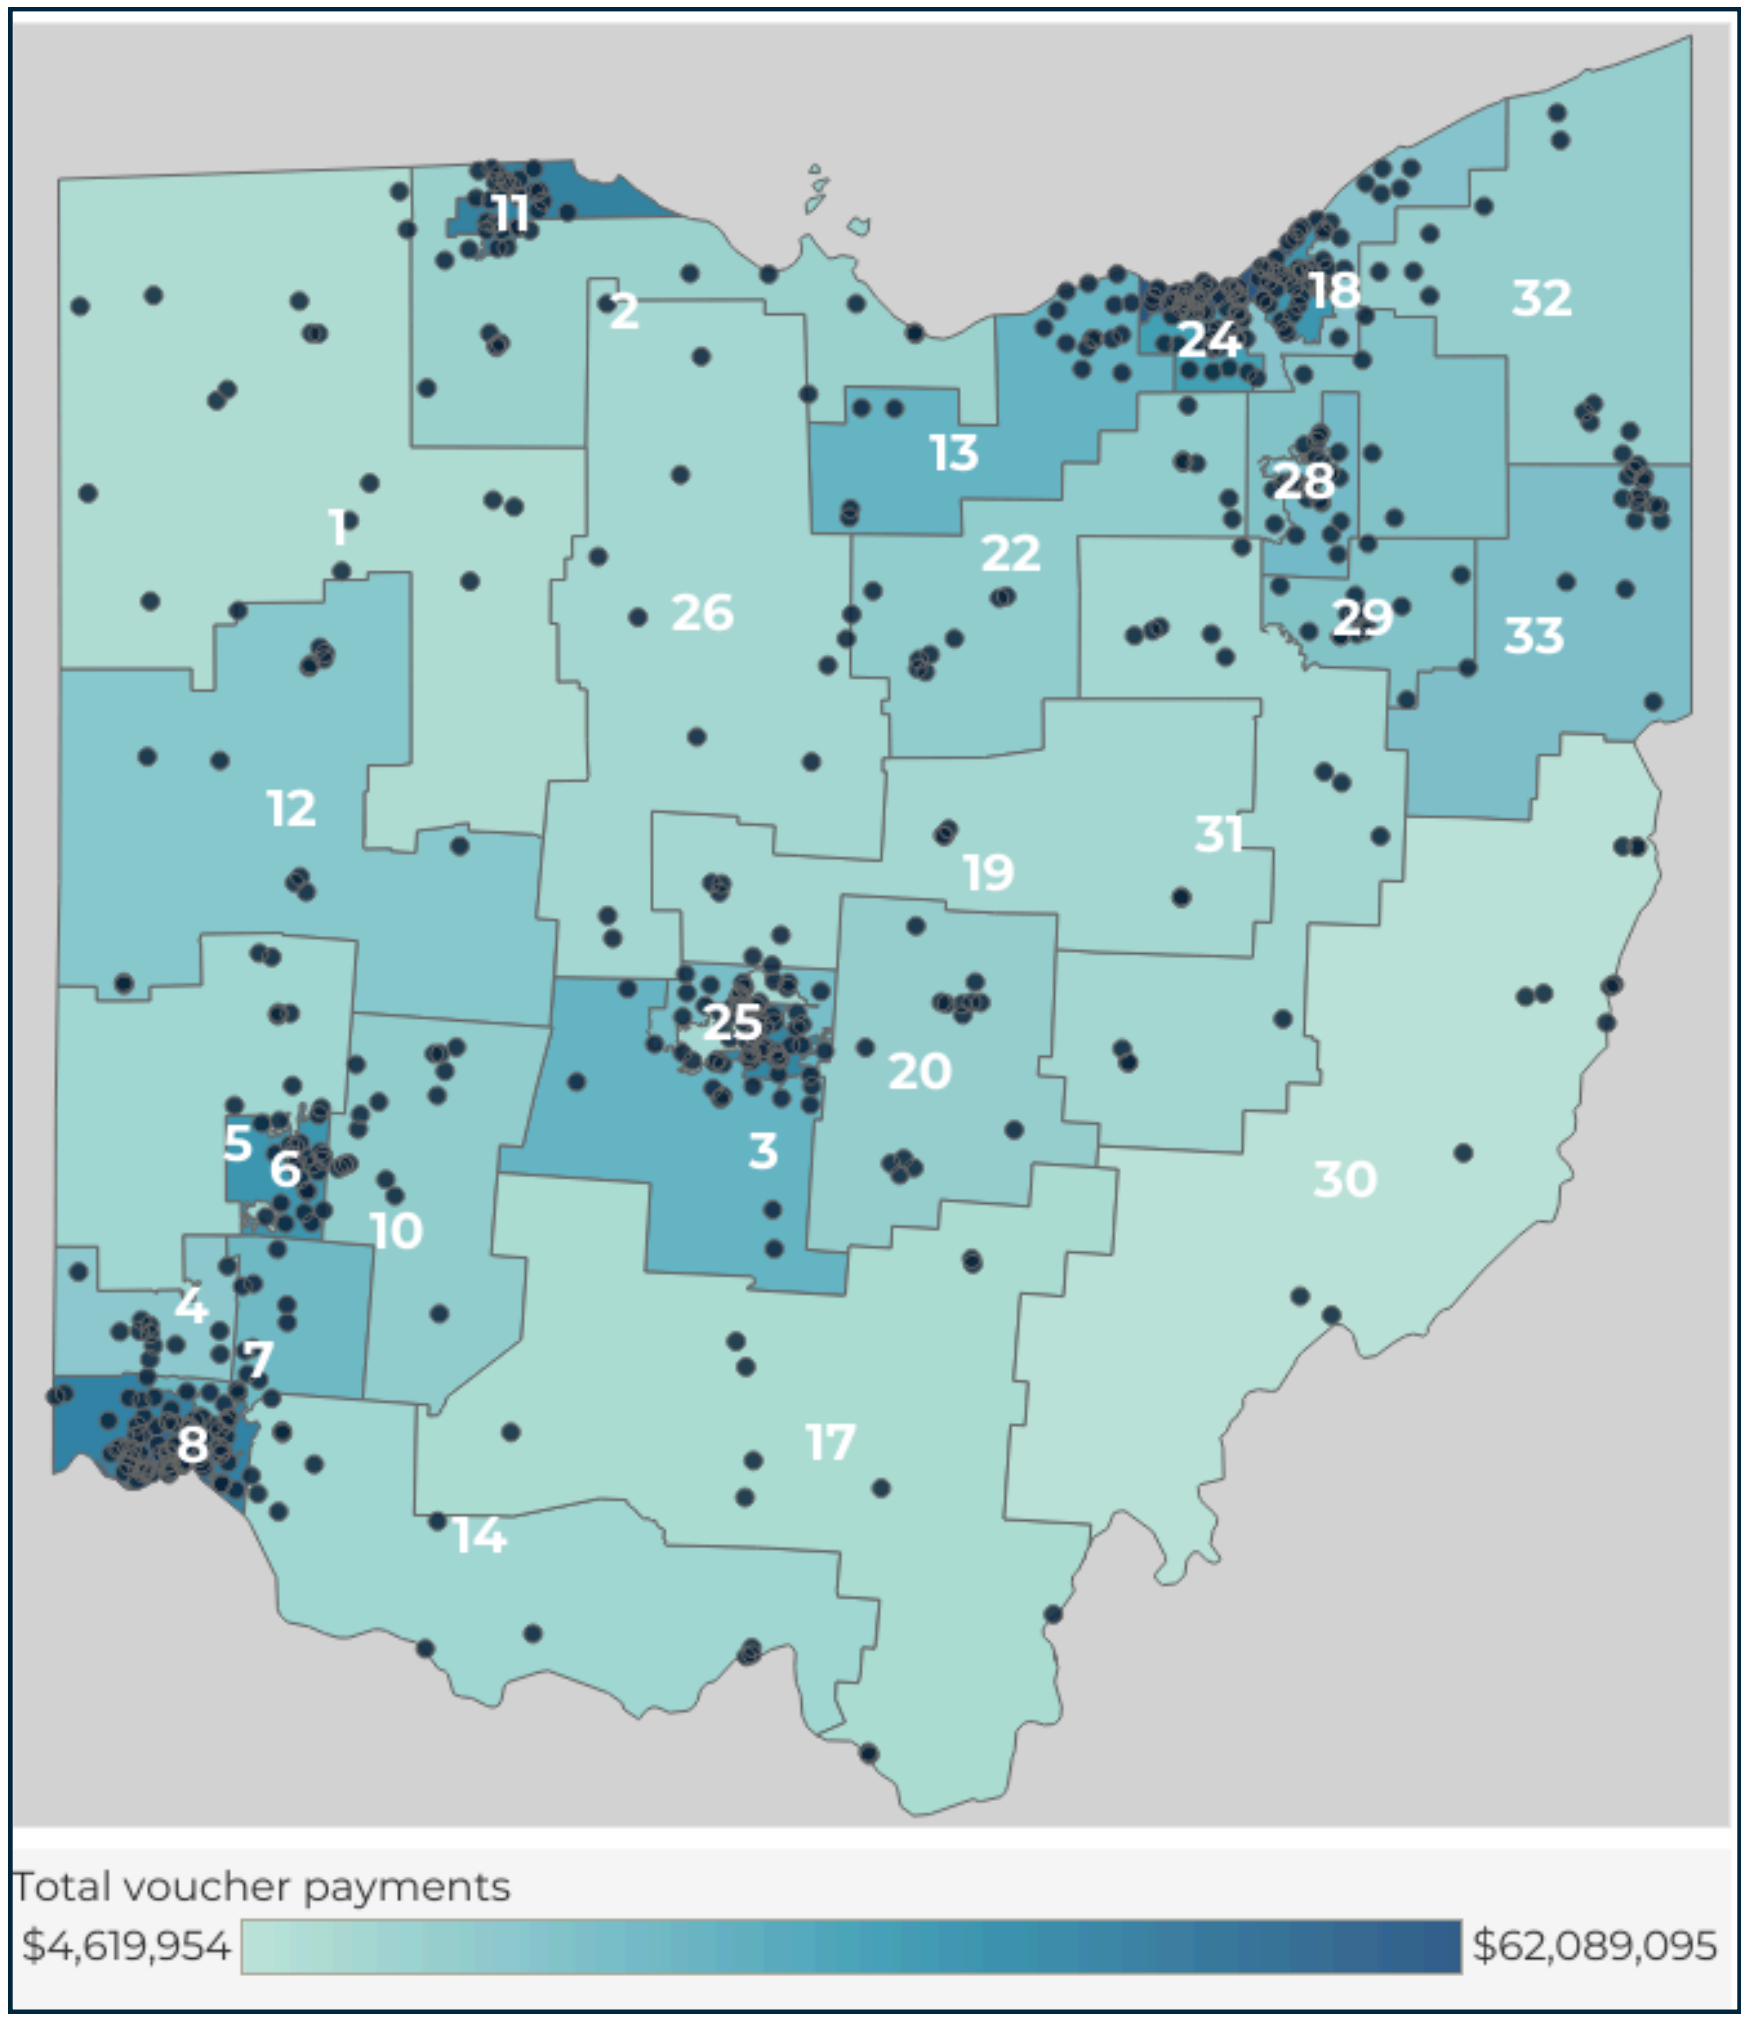

Email them at
or call them at

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 3

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 3 there are

16

private voucher schools attended by 4,332

voucher students.

In District 3 there are

93

public schools attended by

54,297

students.

Contact Senator Reynolds and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

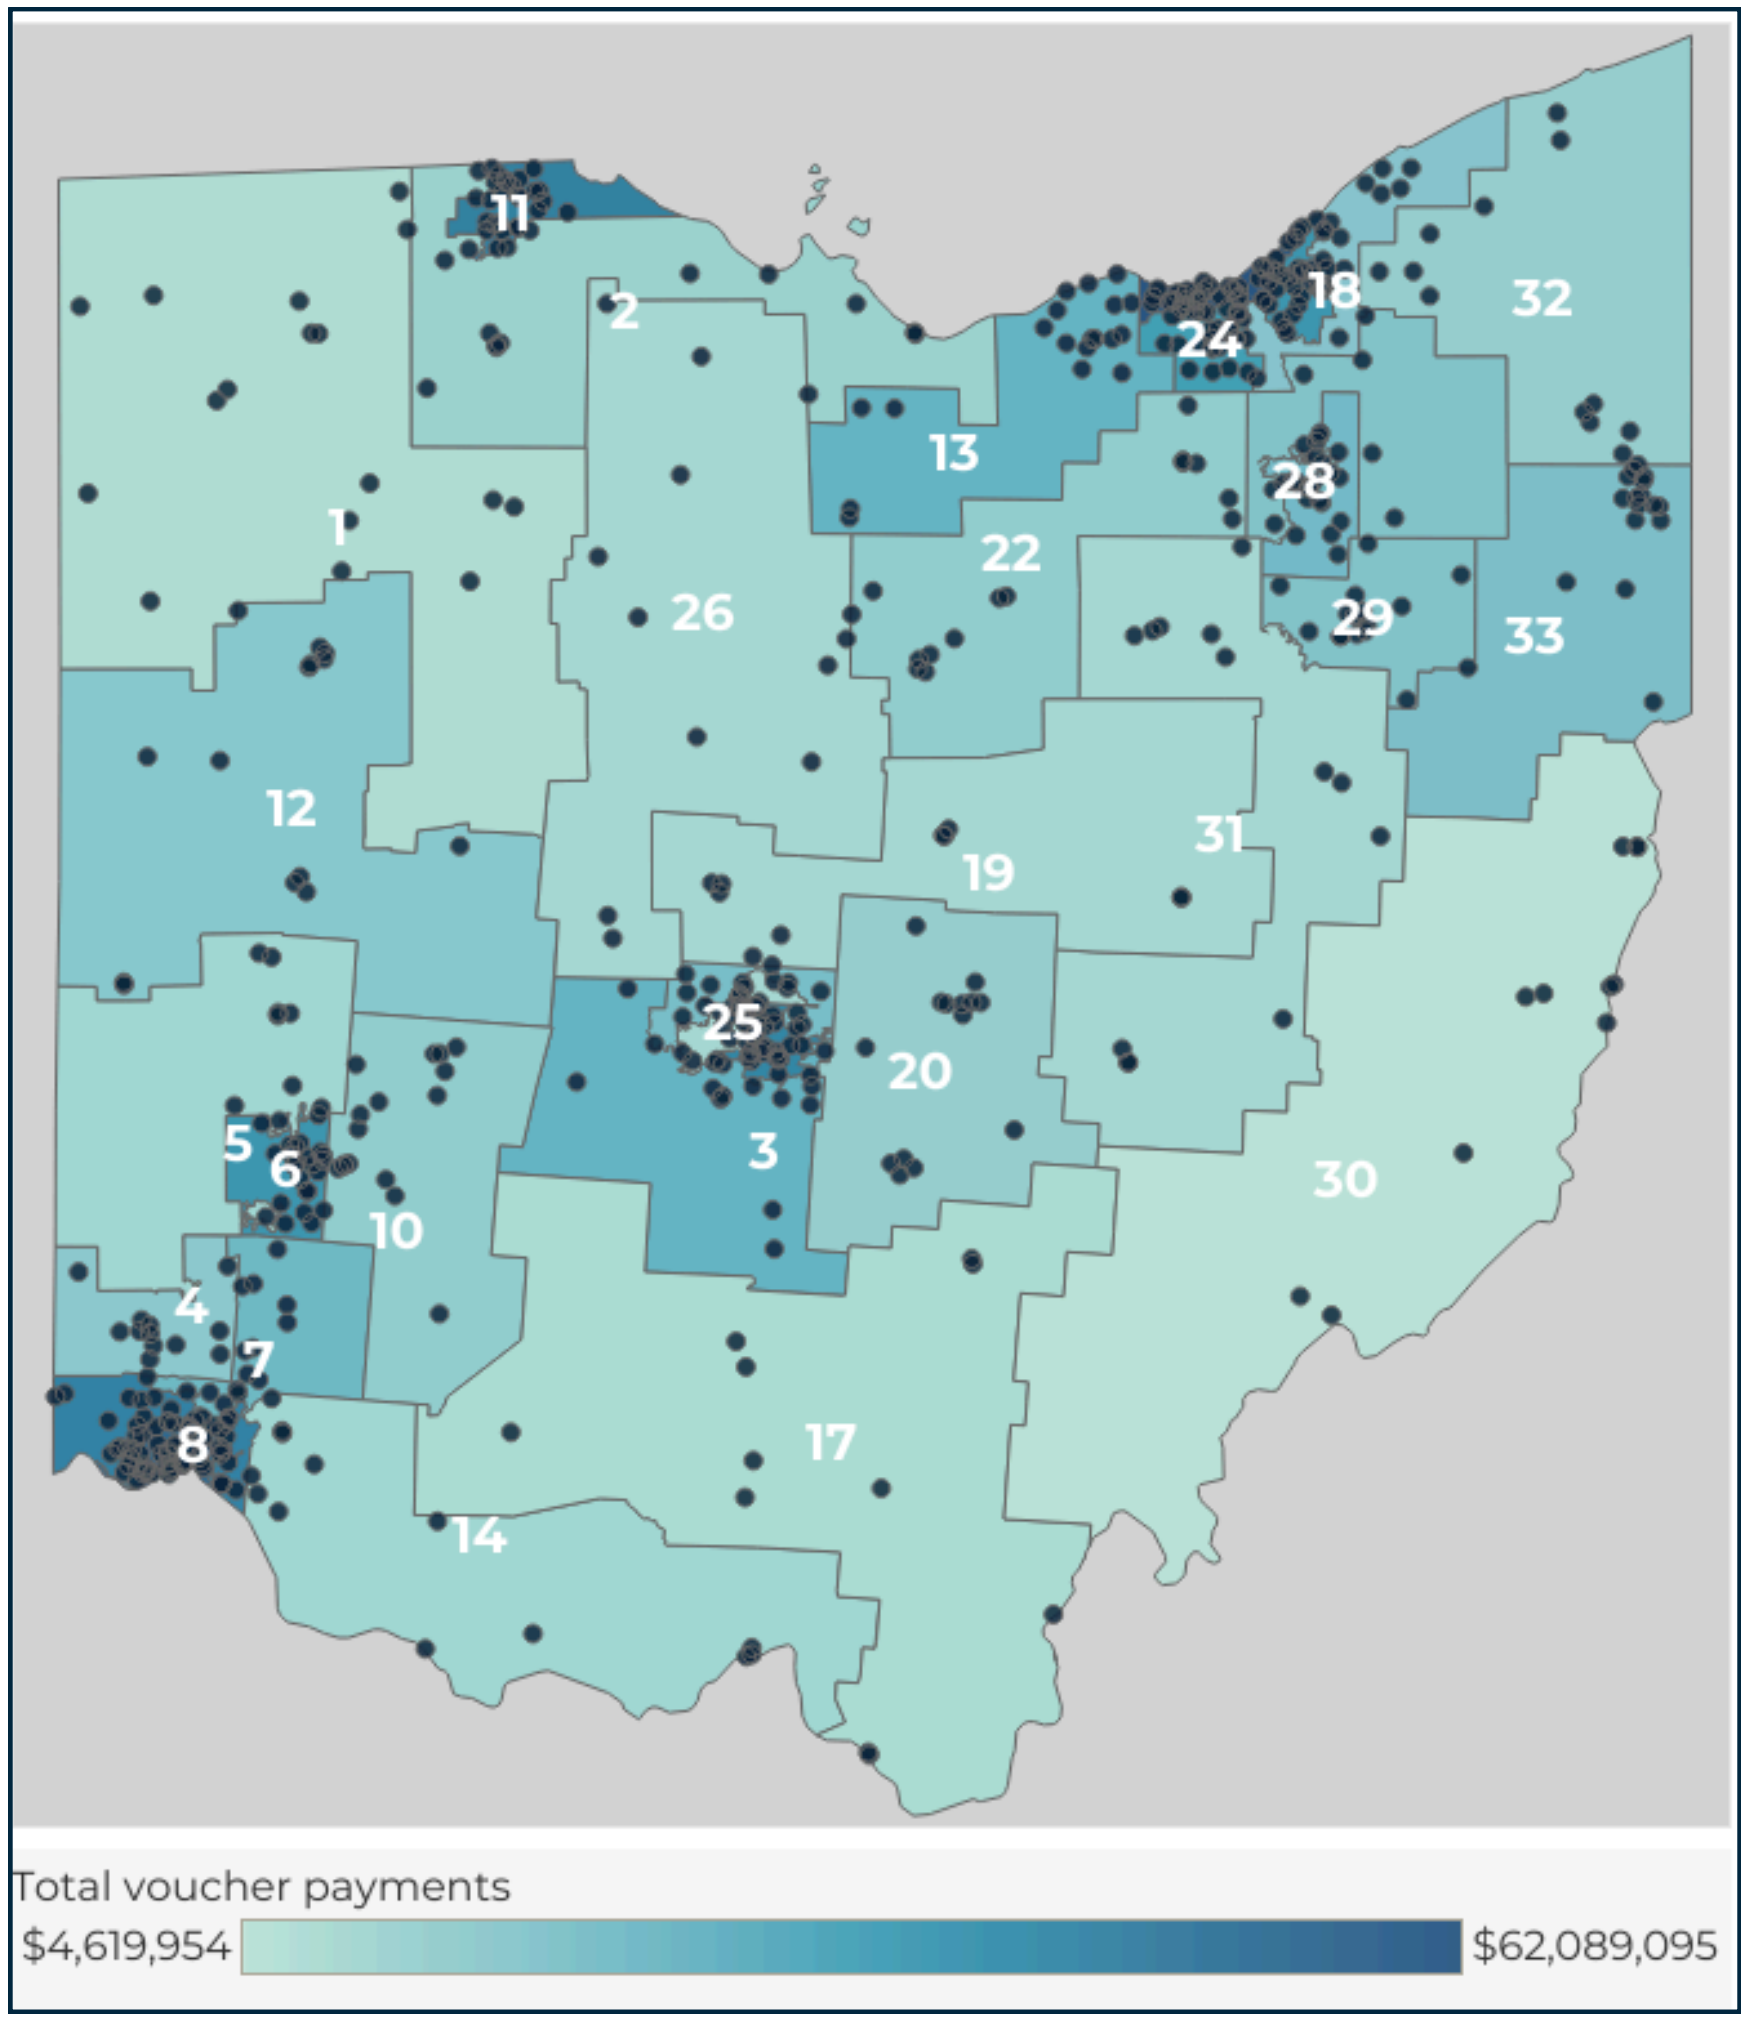

Email them at reynolds@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8064

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 30

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 30 there are 12

private voucher schools attended by

1,241

voucher students.

In District 30 there are 118

public schools attended by 39,075

students.

Contact Senator Chavez and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

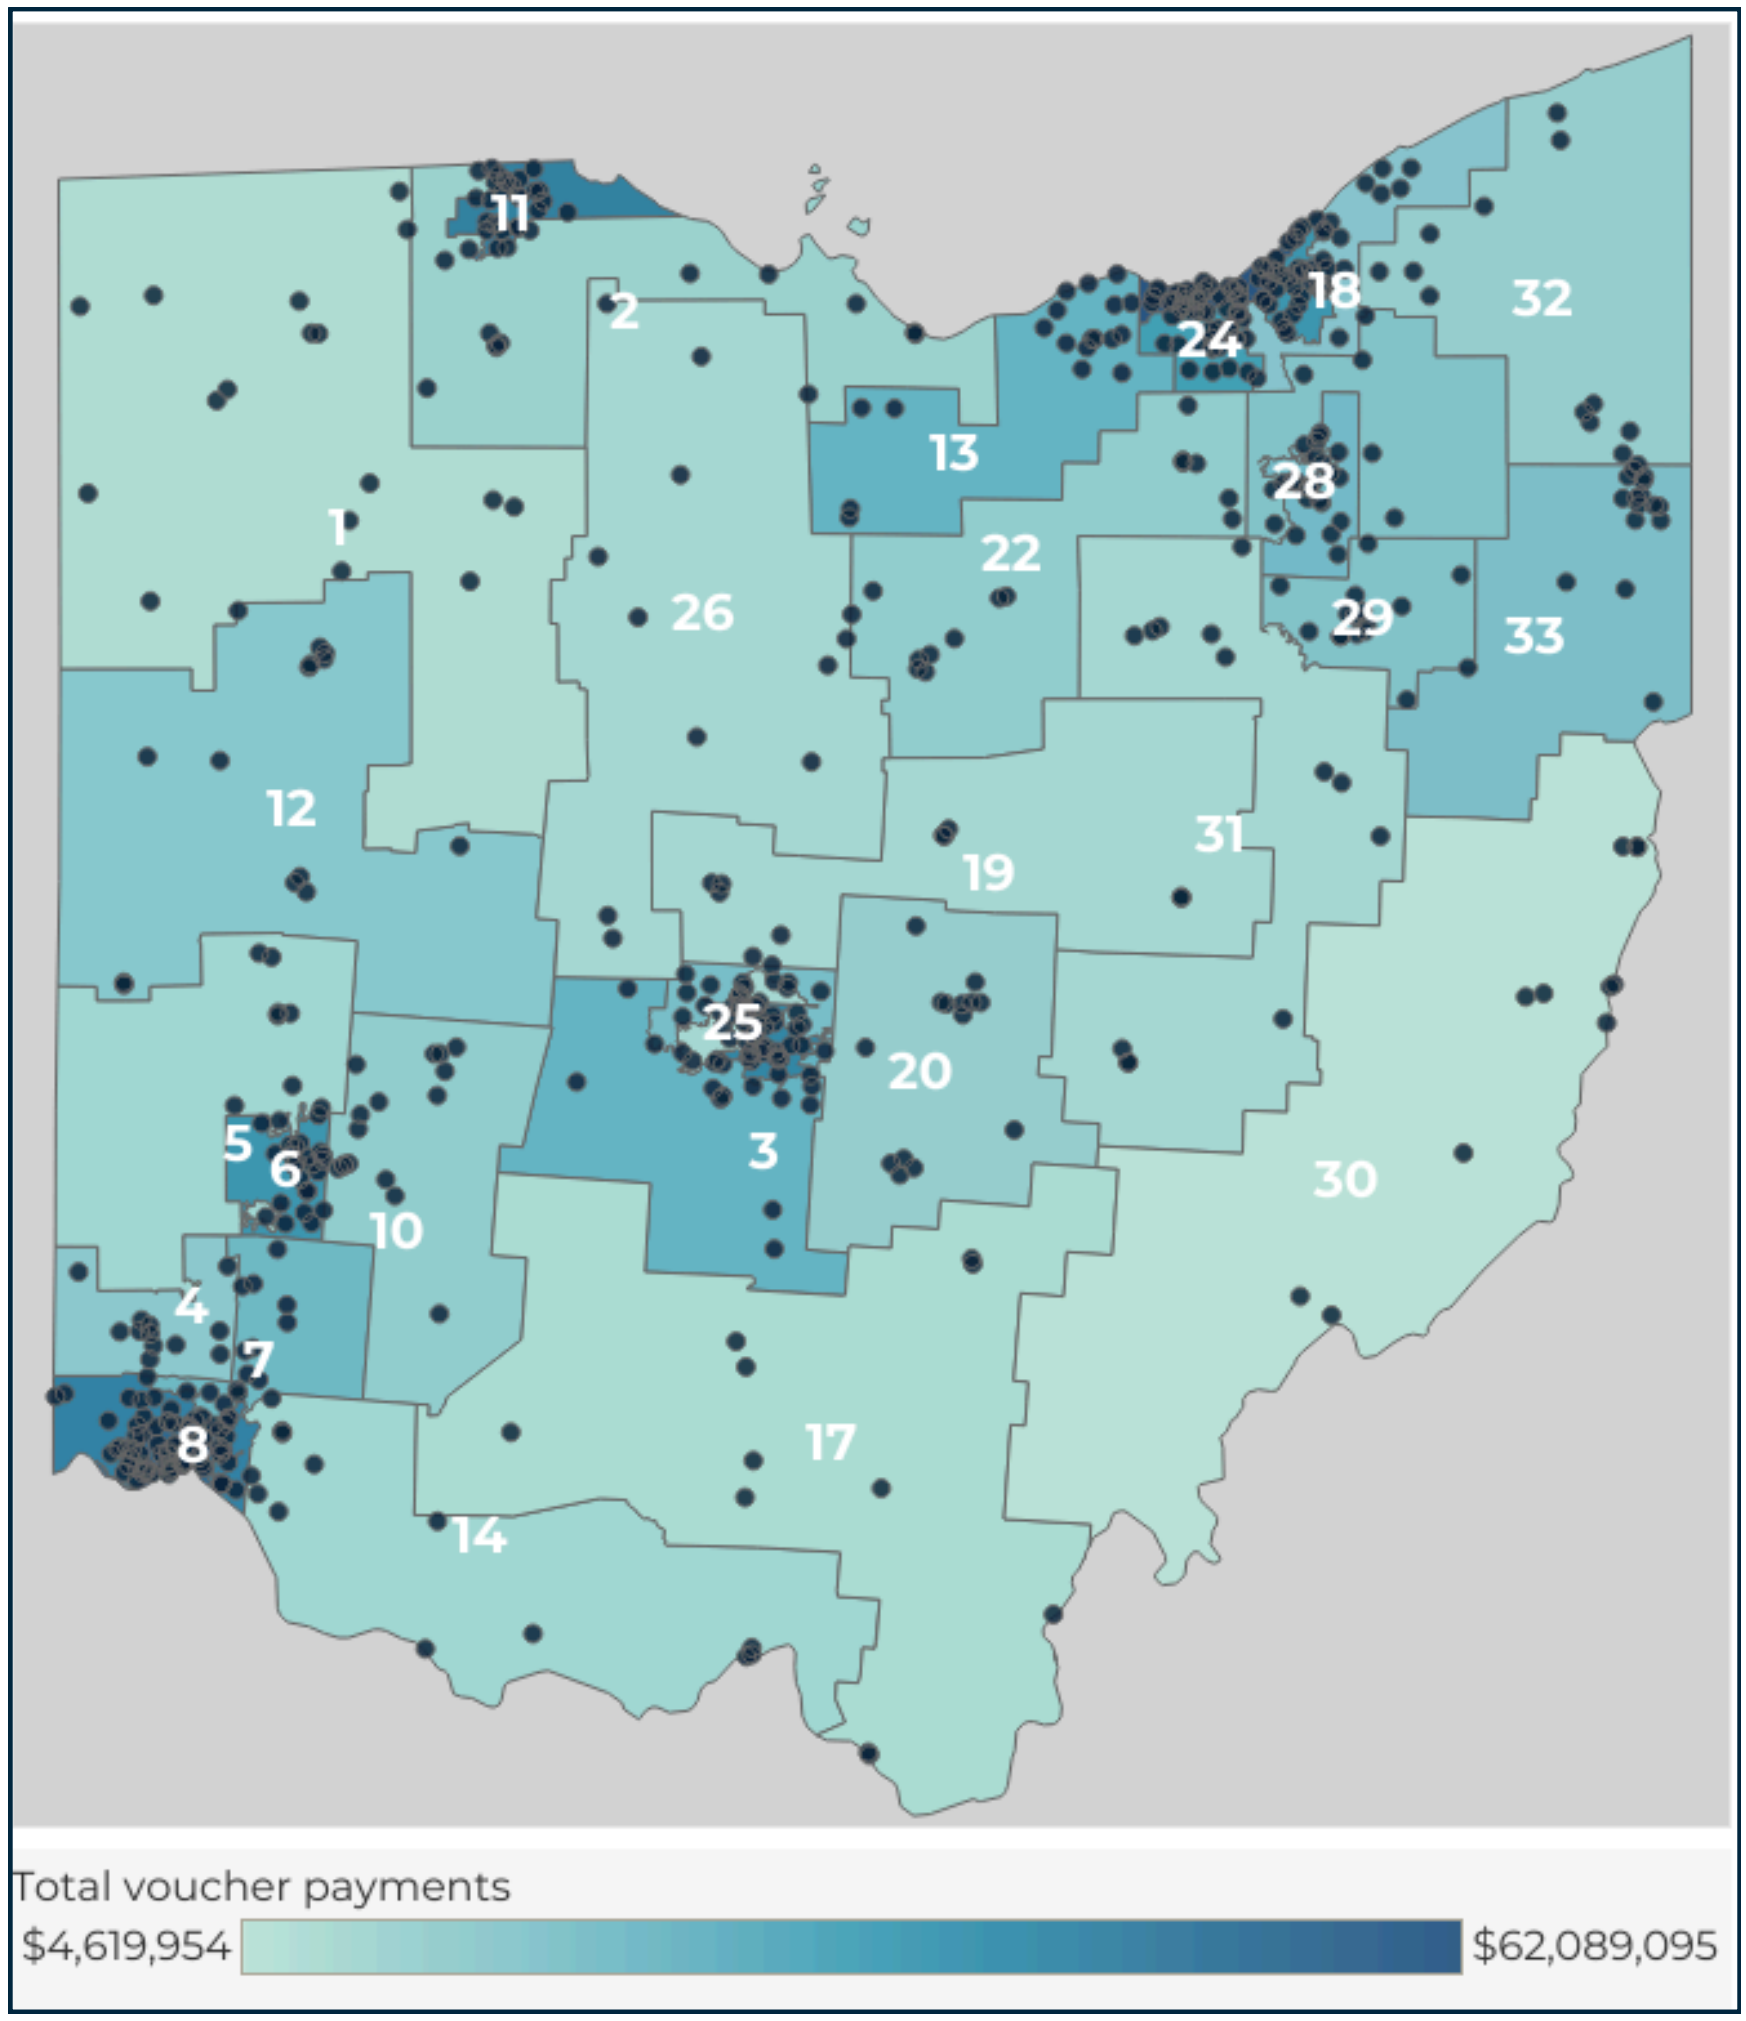

Email them at chavez@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-6508

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 31

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 31 there are

13

private voucher schools attended by

1,771

voucher students.

In District 31 there are 117

public schools attended by

44,912

students.

Contact Senator Landis and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

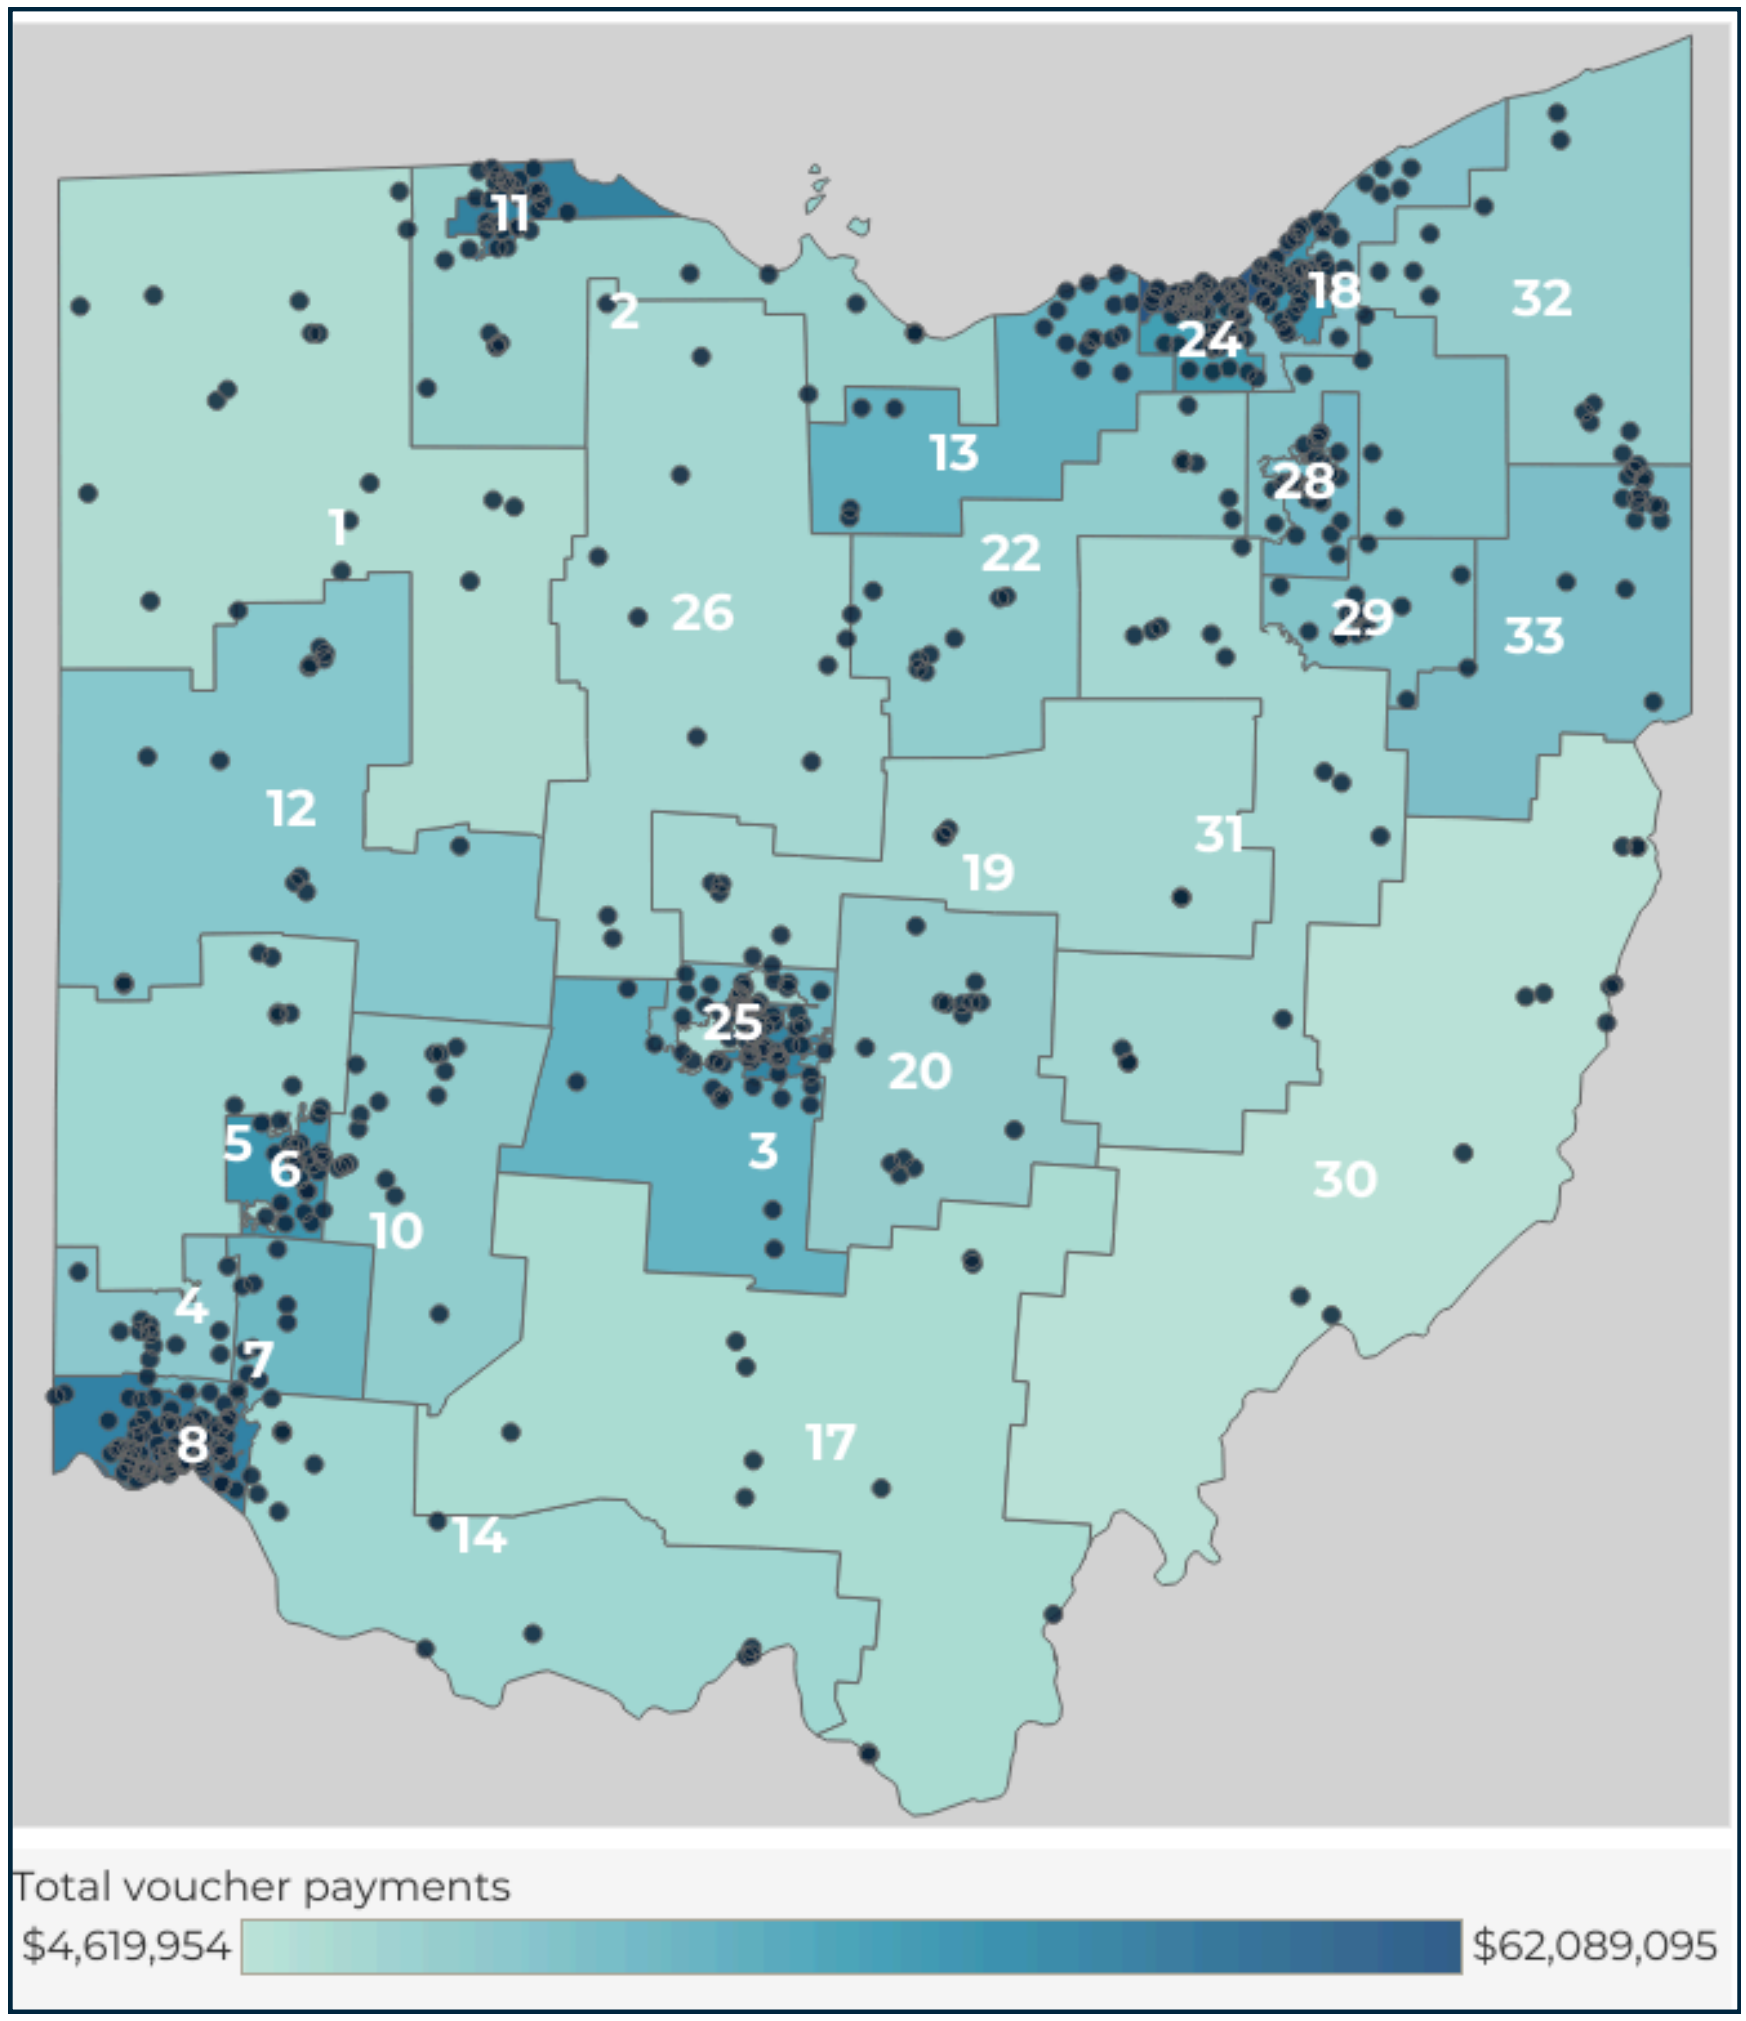

Email them at landis@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-5838

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 32

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 32 there are 13

private voucher schools attended by

2,697

voucher students.

In District 32 there are 110

public schools attended by

41,330

students.

Contact Senator O'Brien and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

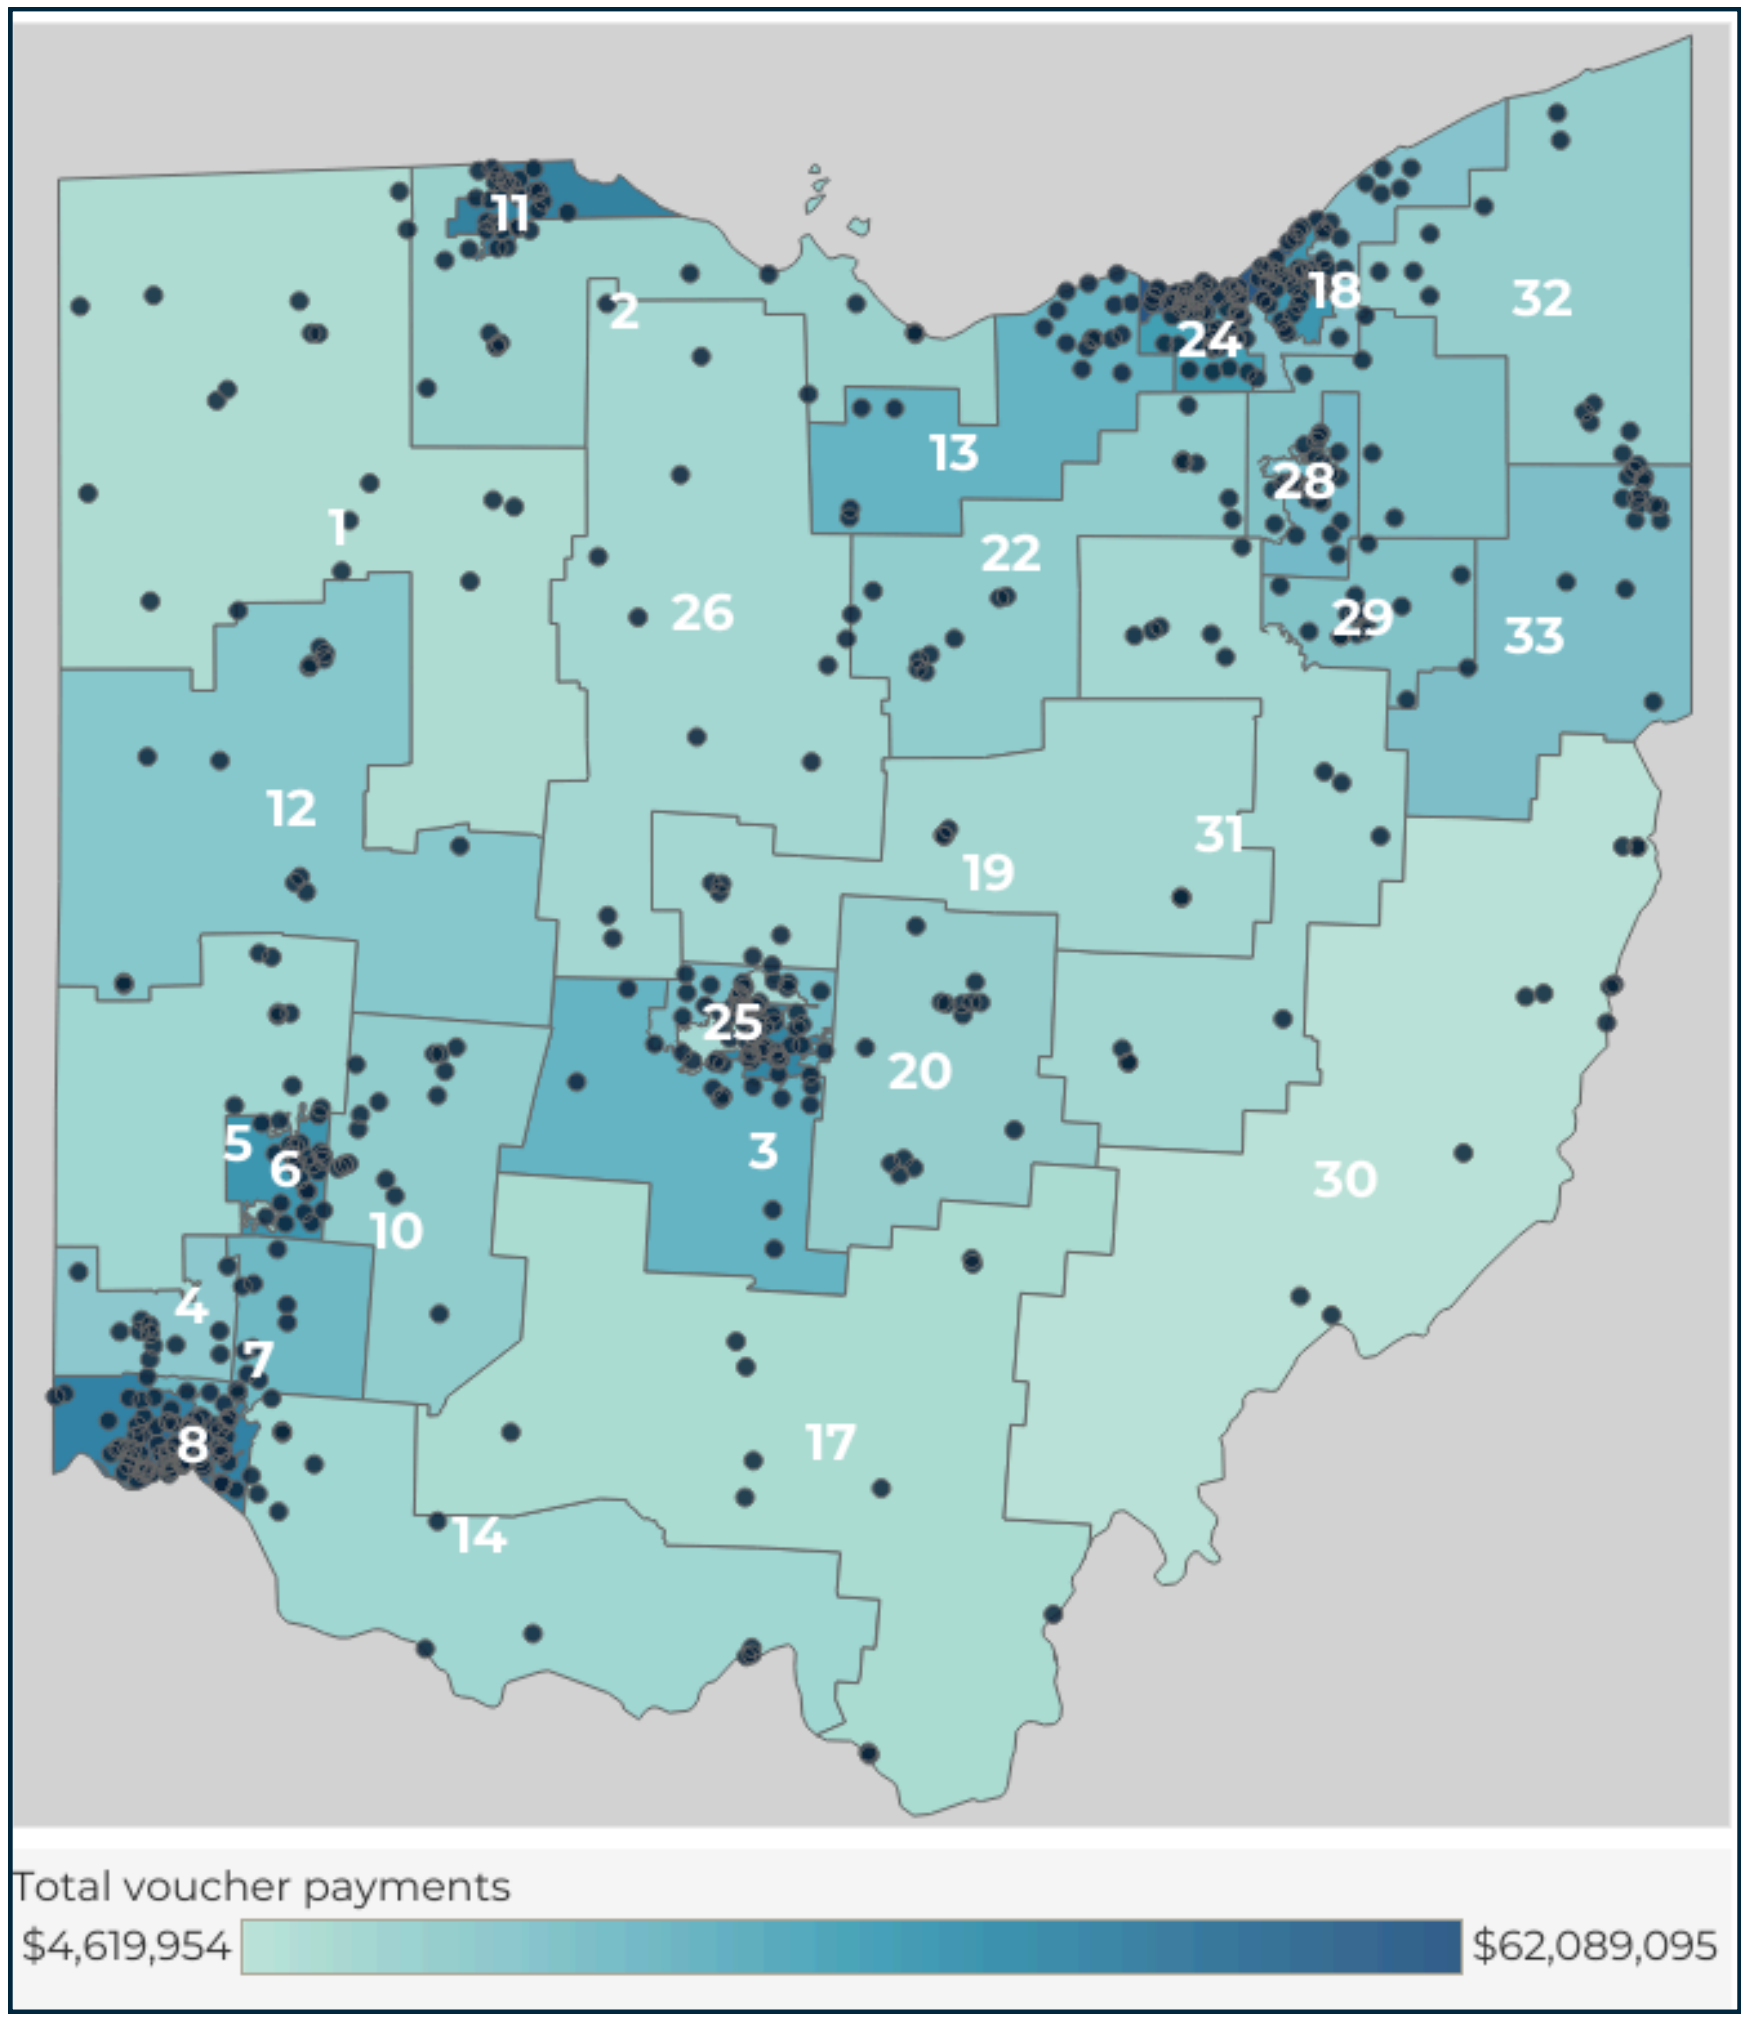

Email them at o'brien@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-7182

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 33

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 33 there are 16

private voucher schools attended by 3,340

voucher students.

In District 33 there are 101

public schools attended by 39,591

students.

Contact Senator Cutrona and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

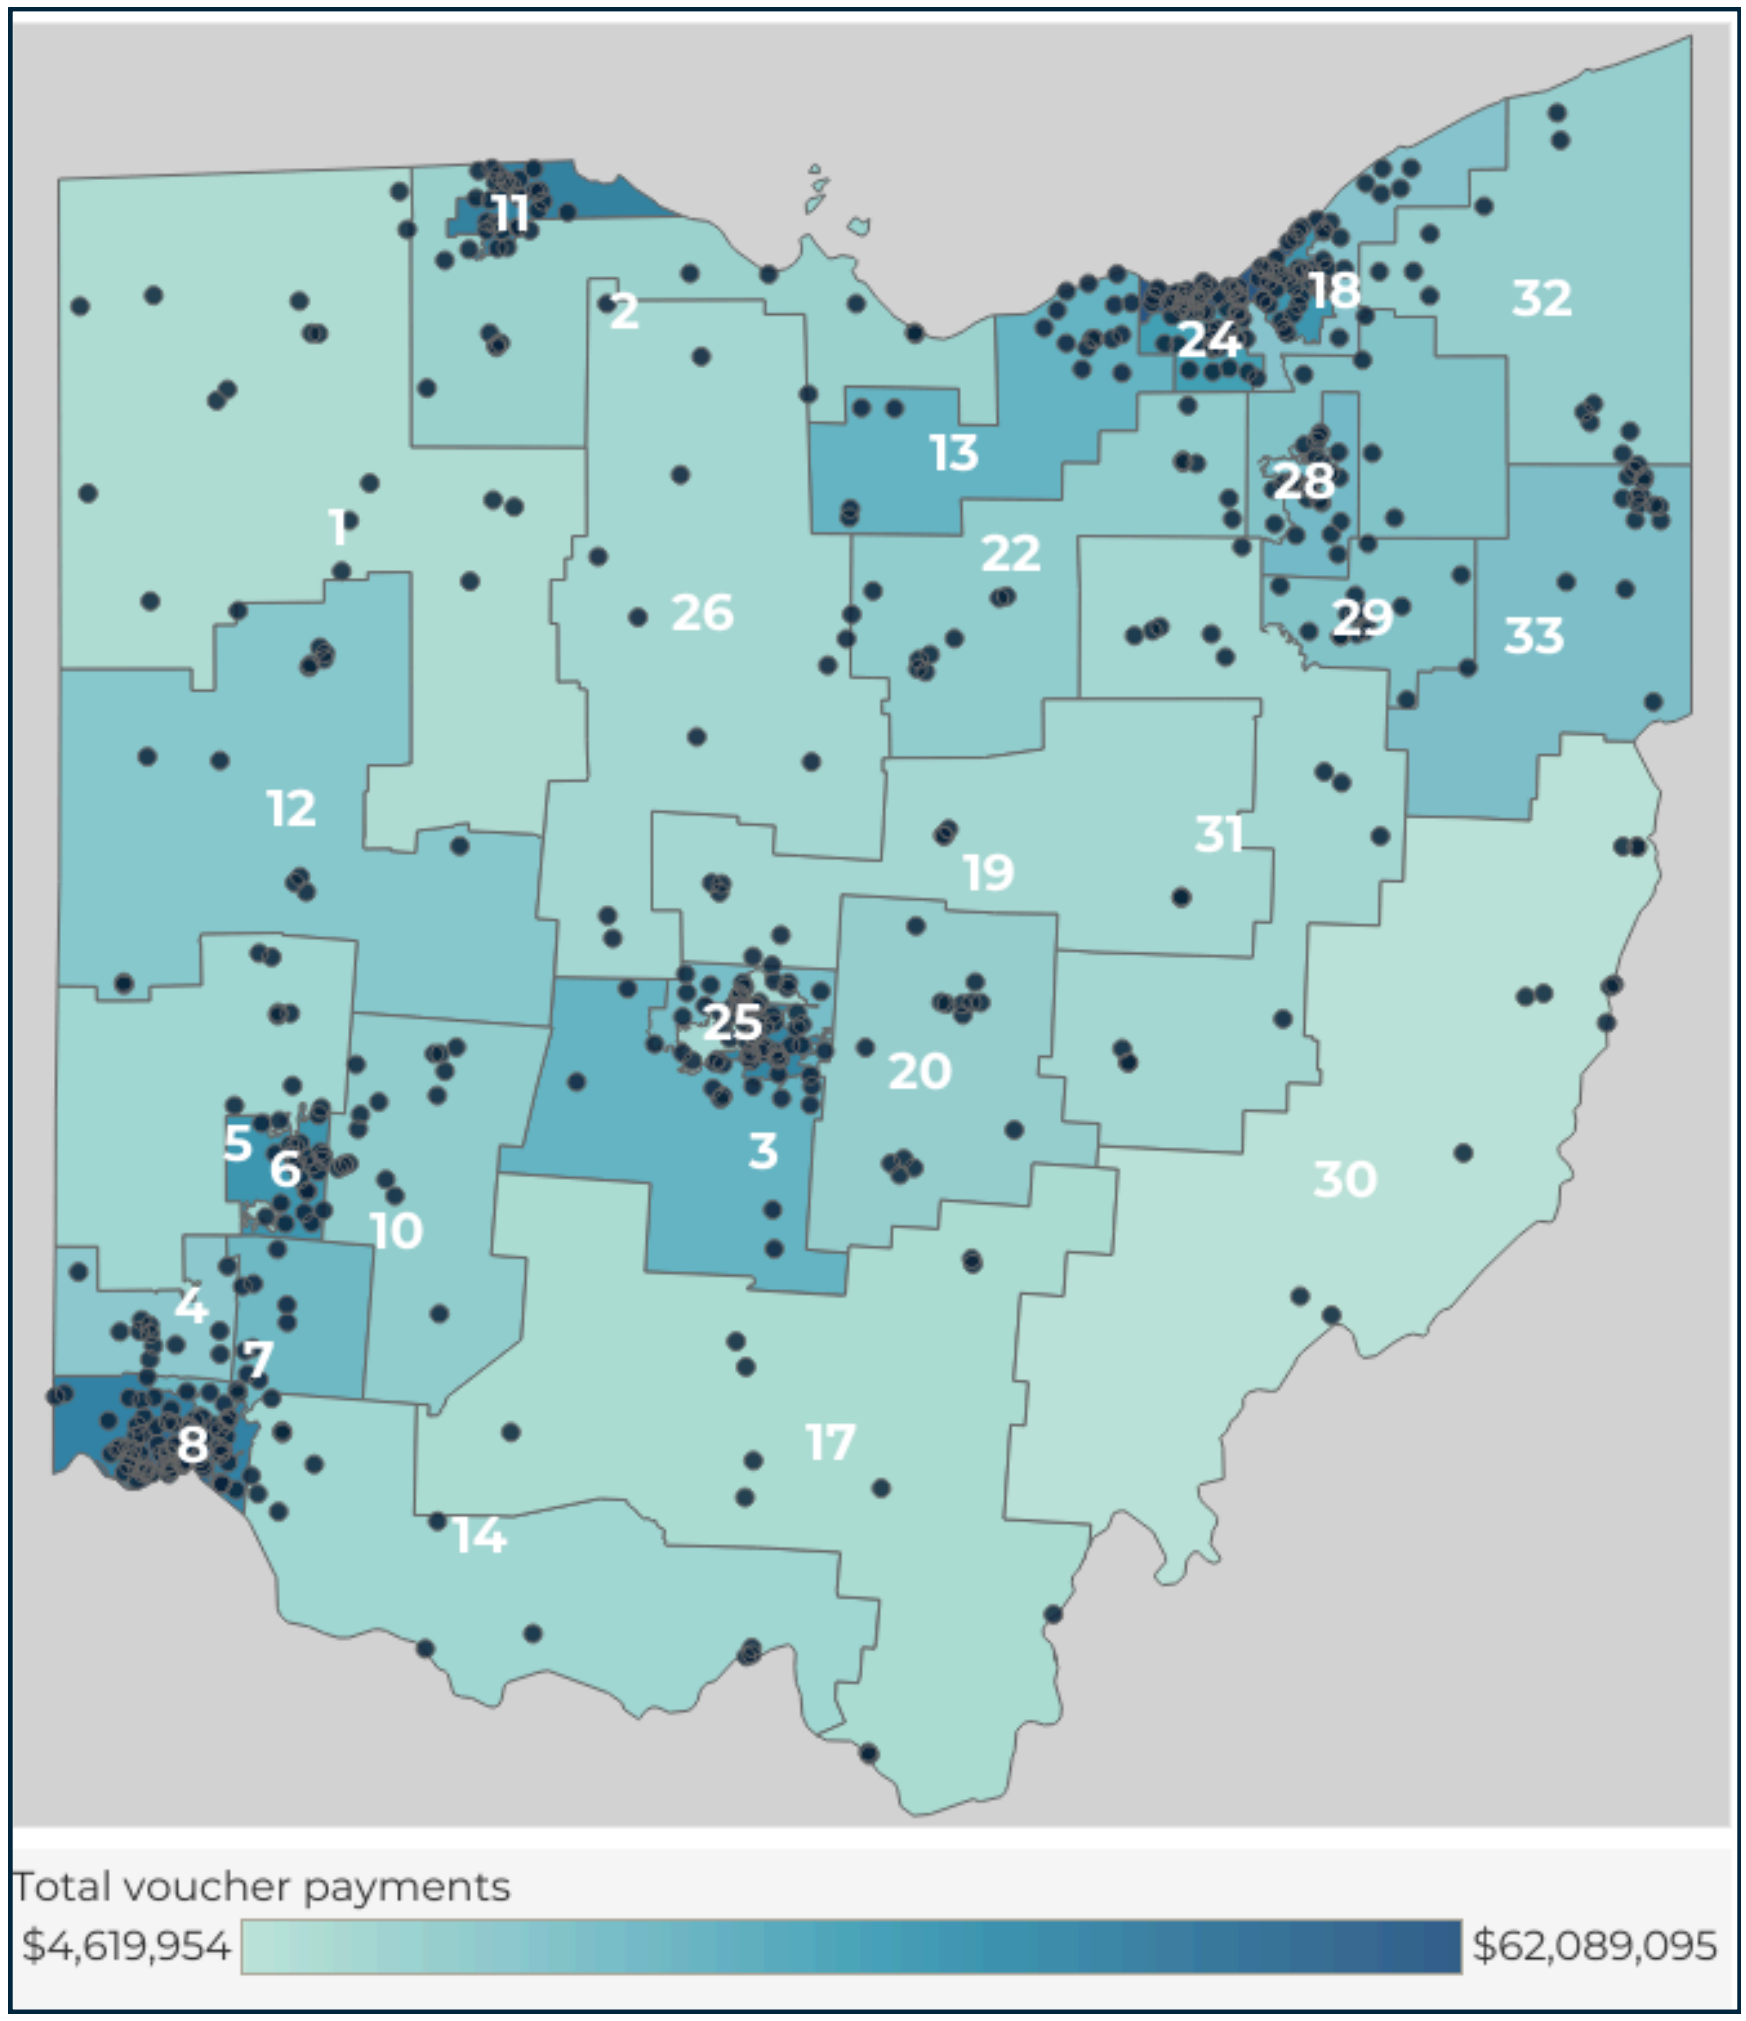

Email them at cutrona@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8285

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 4

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 4 there are 12

private voucher schools attended by 3,640

voucher students.

In District 4 there are

75

public schools attended by

53,993

students.

Contact Senator Lang and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

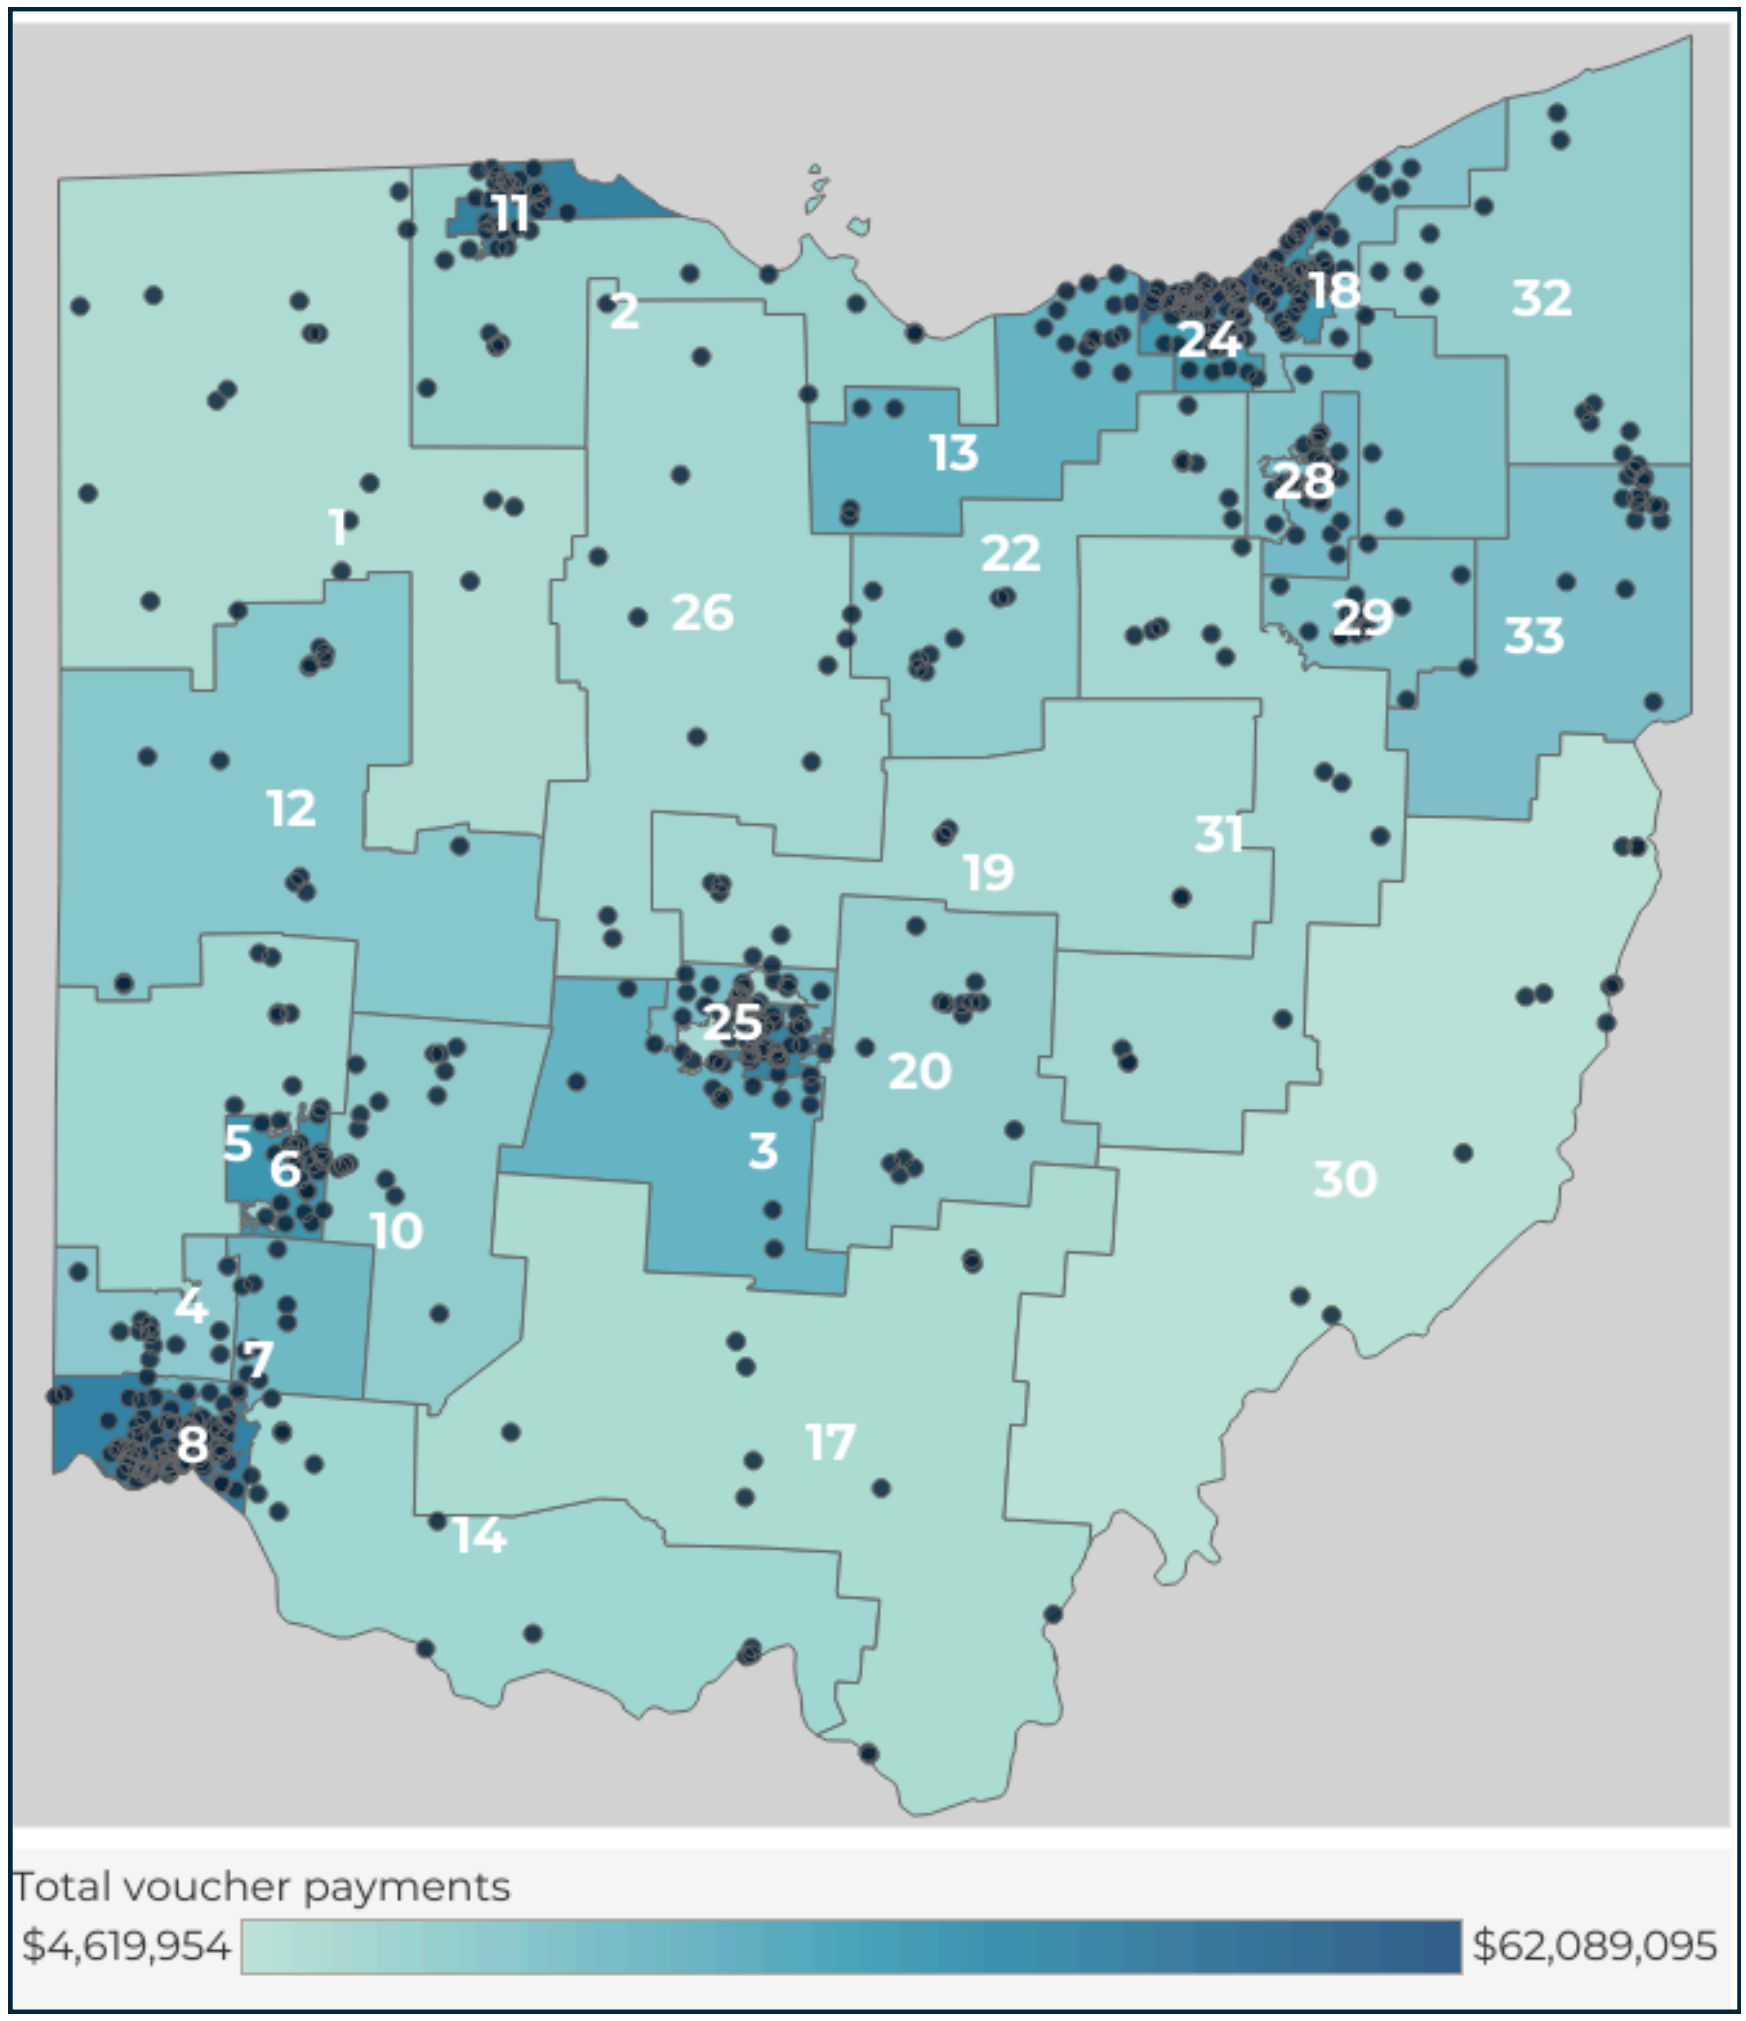

Email them at lang@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8072

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 5

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 5 there are

11

private voucher schools attended by

1,917

voucher students.

In District 5 there are 106

public schools attended by 47,987

students.

Contact Senator Huffman and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

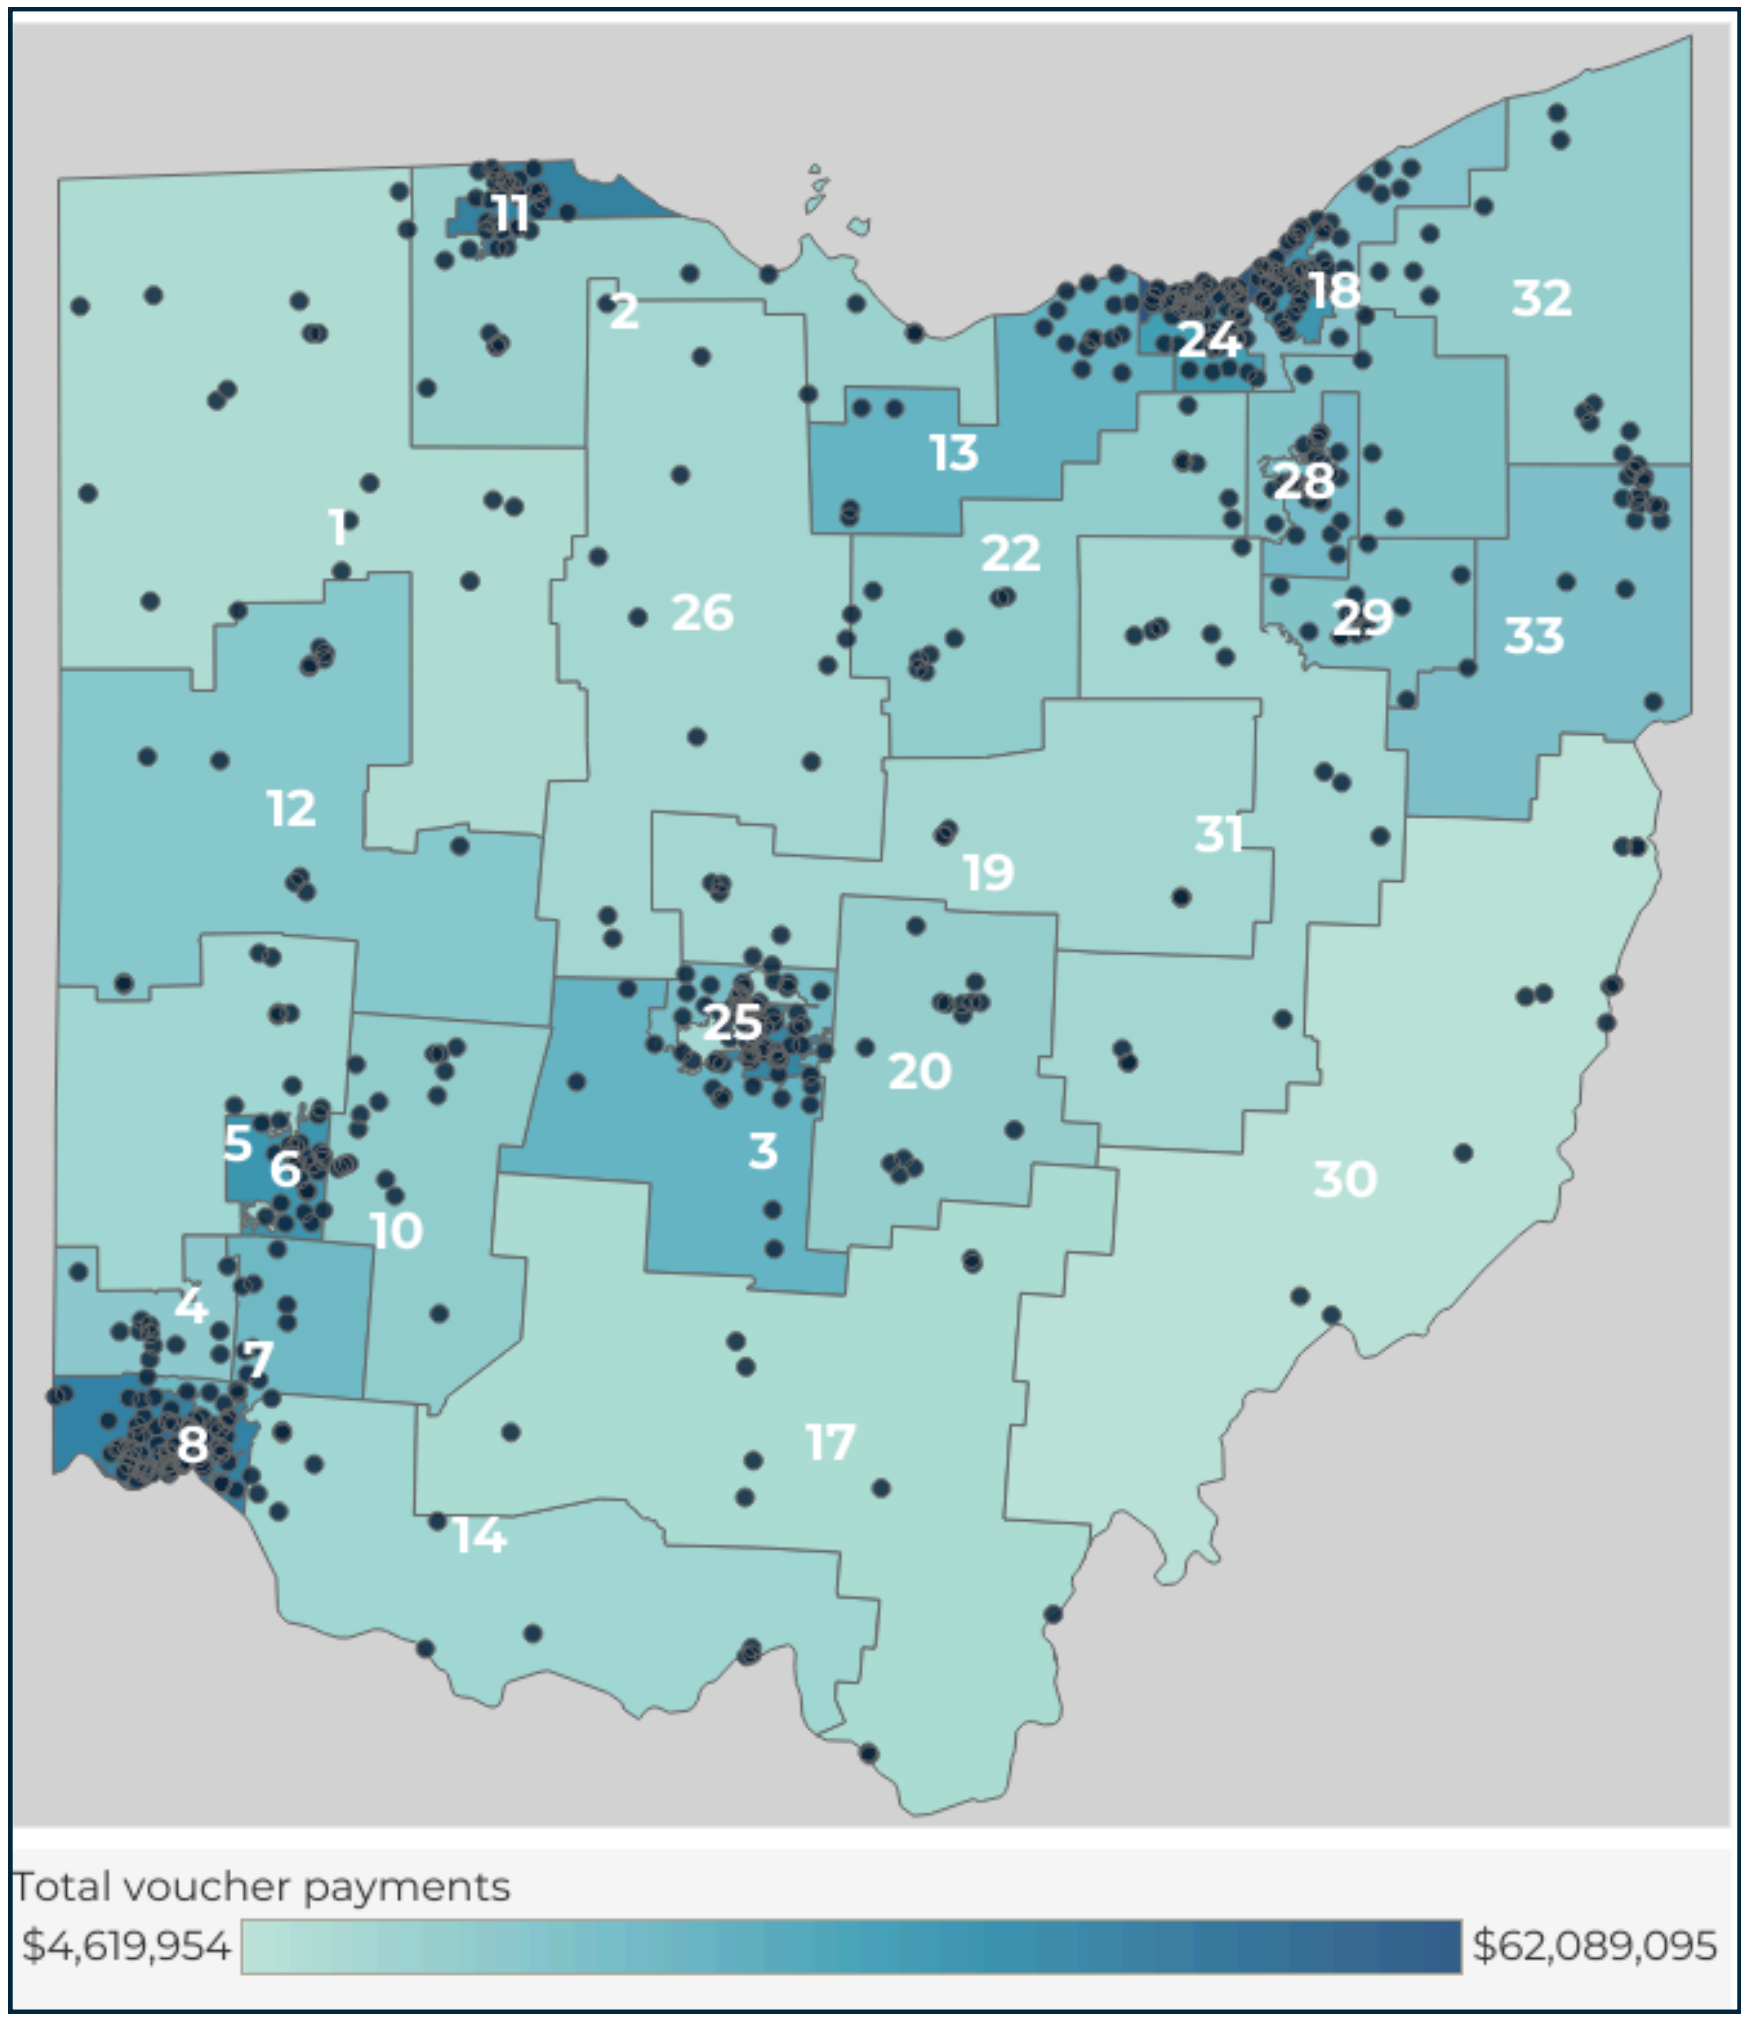

Email them at shuffman@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-6247

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 6

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 6 there are

22

private voucher schools attended by 7,016

voucher students.

In District 6 there are

80

public schools attended by 38,591

students.

Contact Senator Blackshear and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

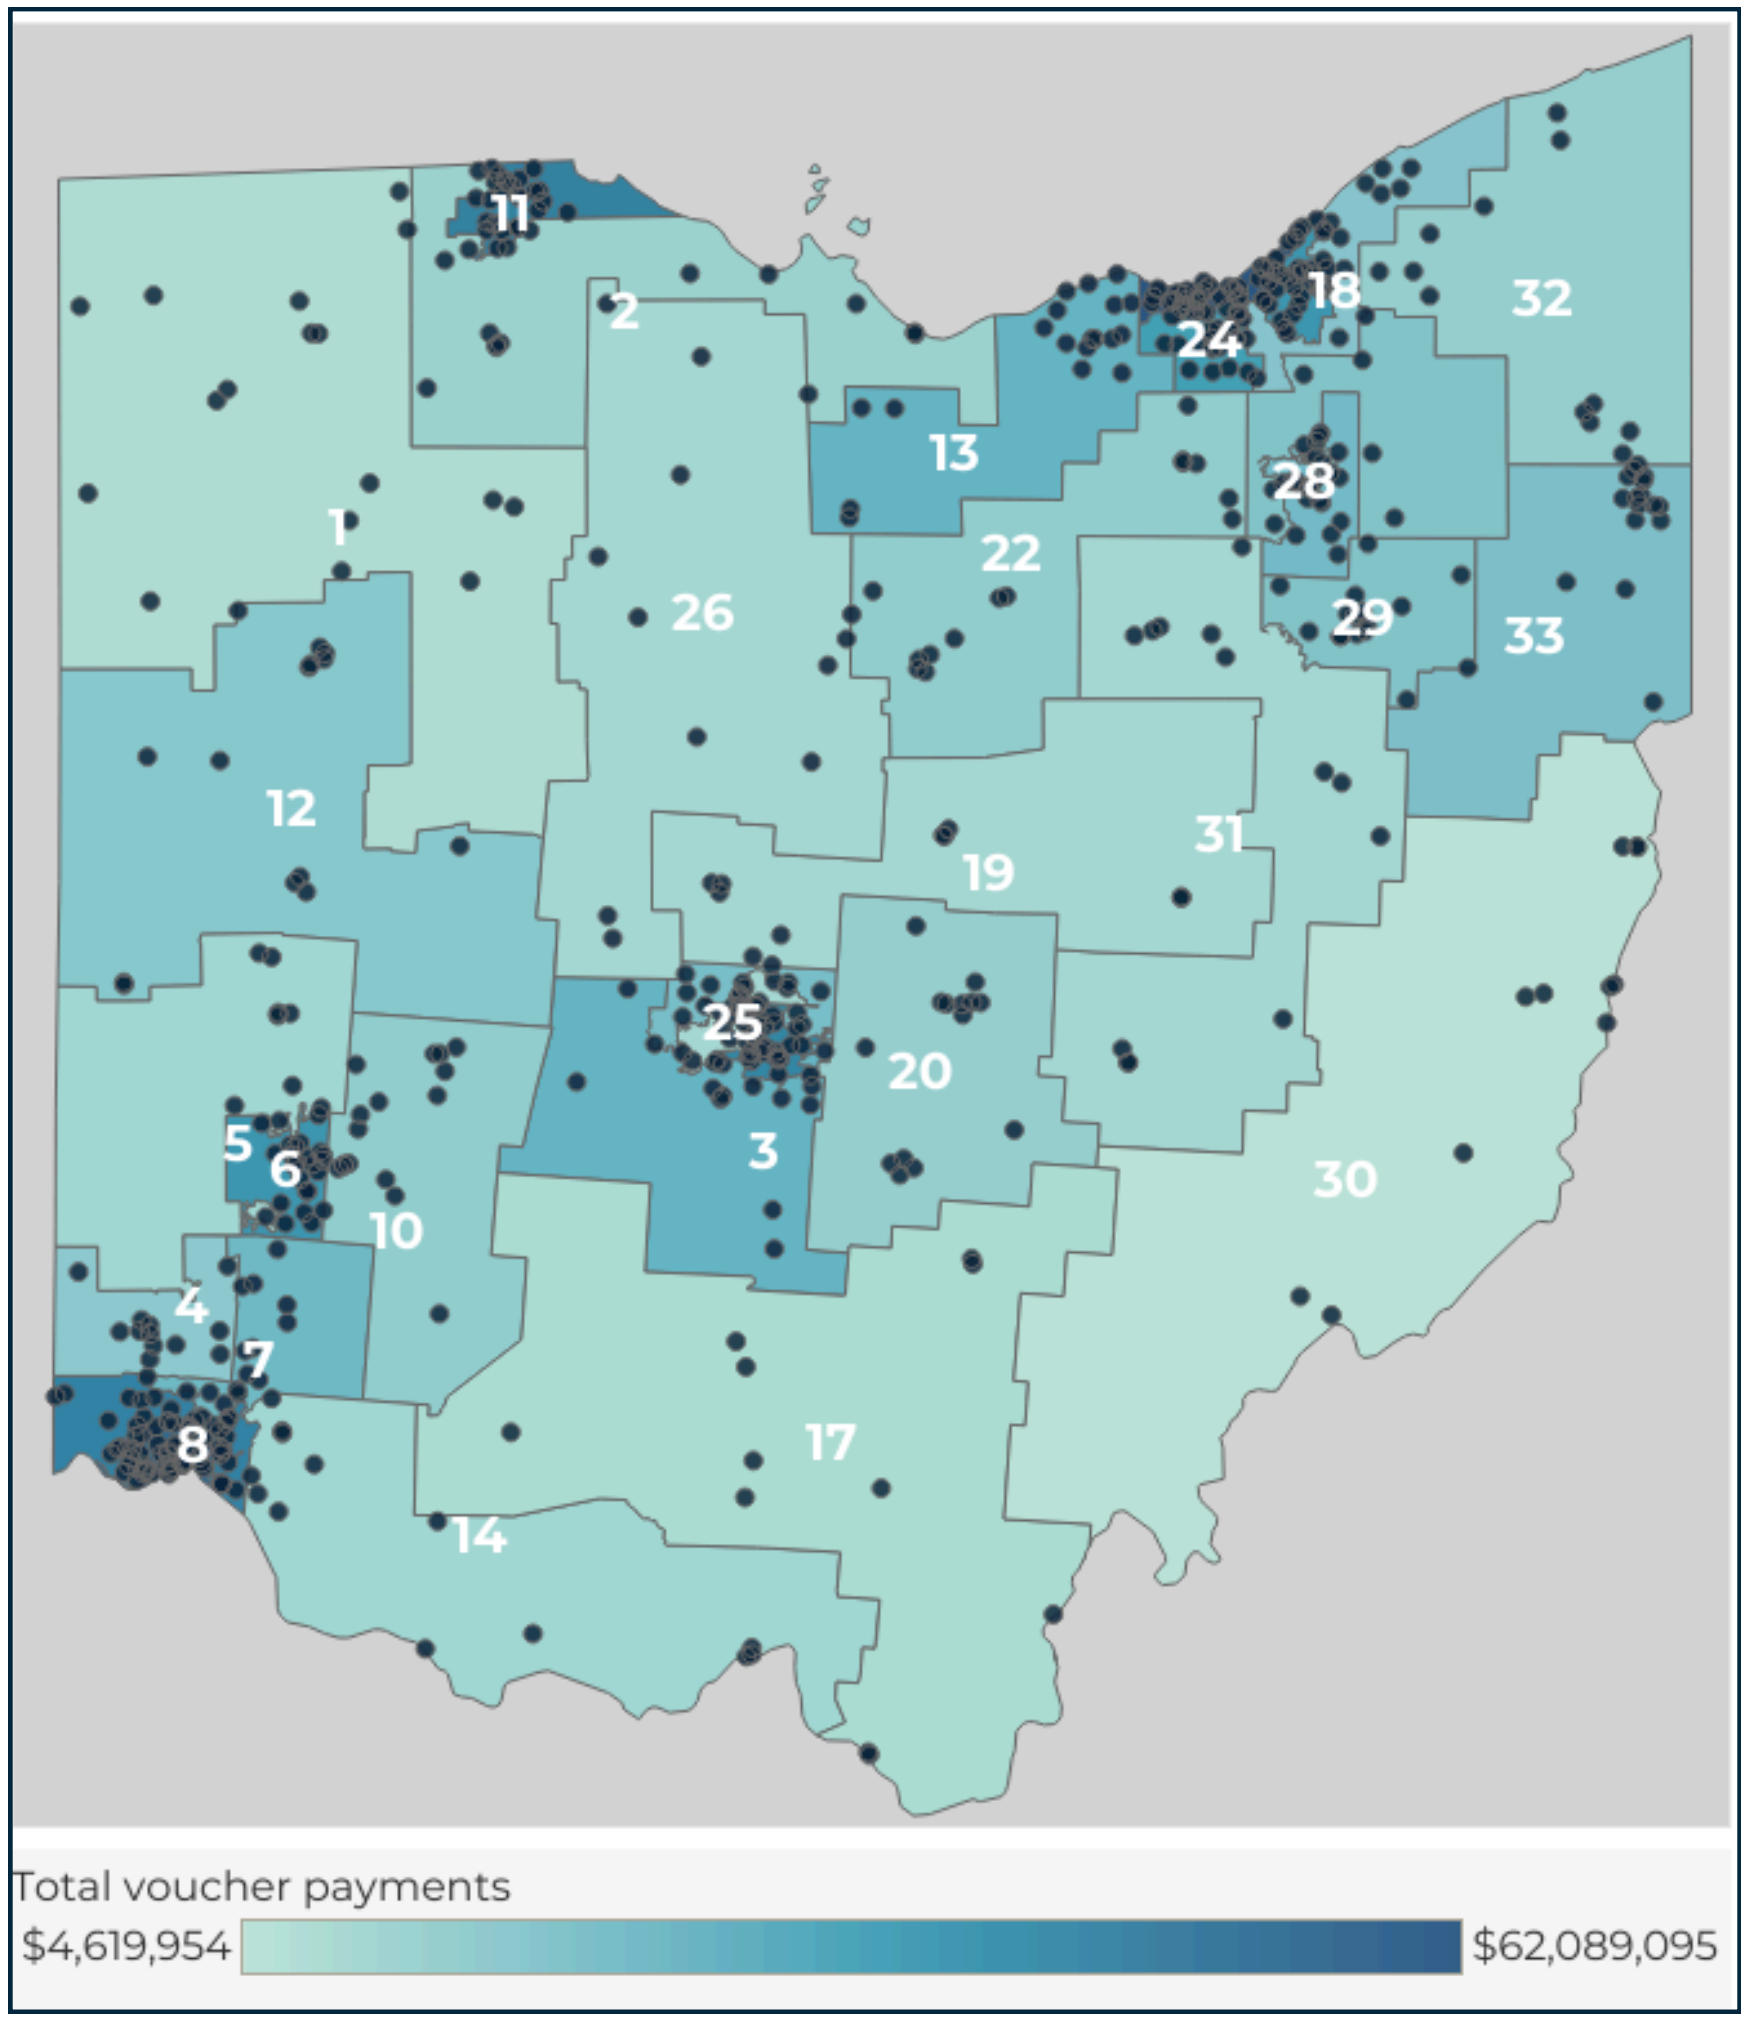

Email them at blackshear@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-4538

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 7

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 7 there are

18

private voucher schools attended by 5,431

voucher students.

In District 7 there are

64

public schools attended by

54,925

students.

Contact Senator Wilson and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

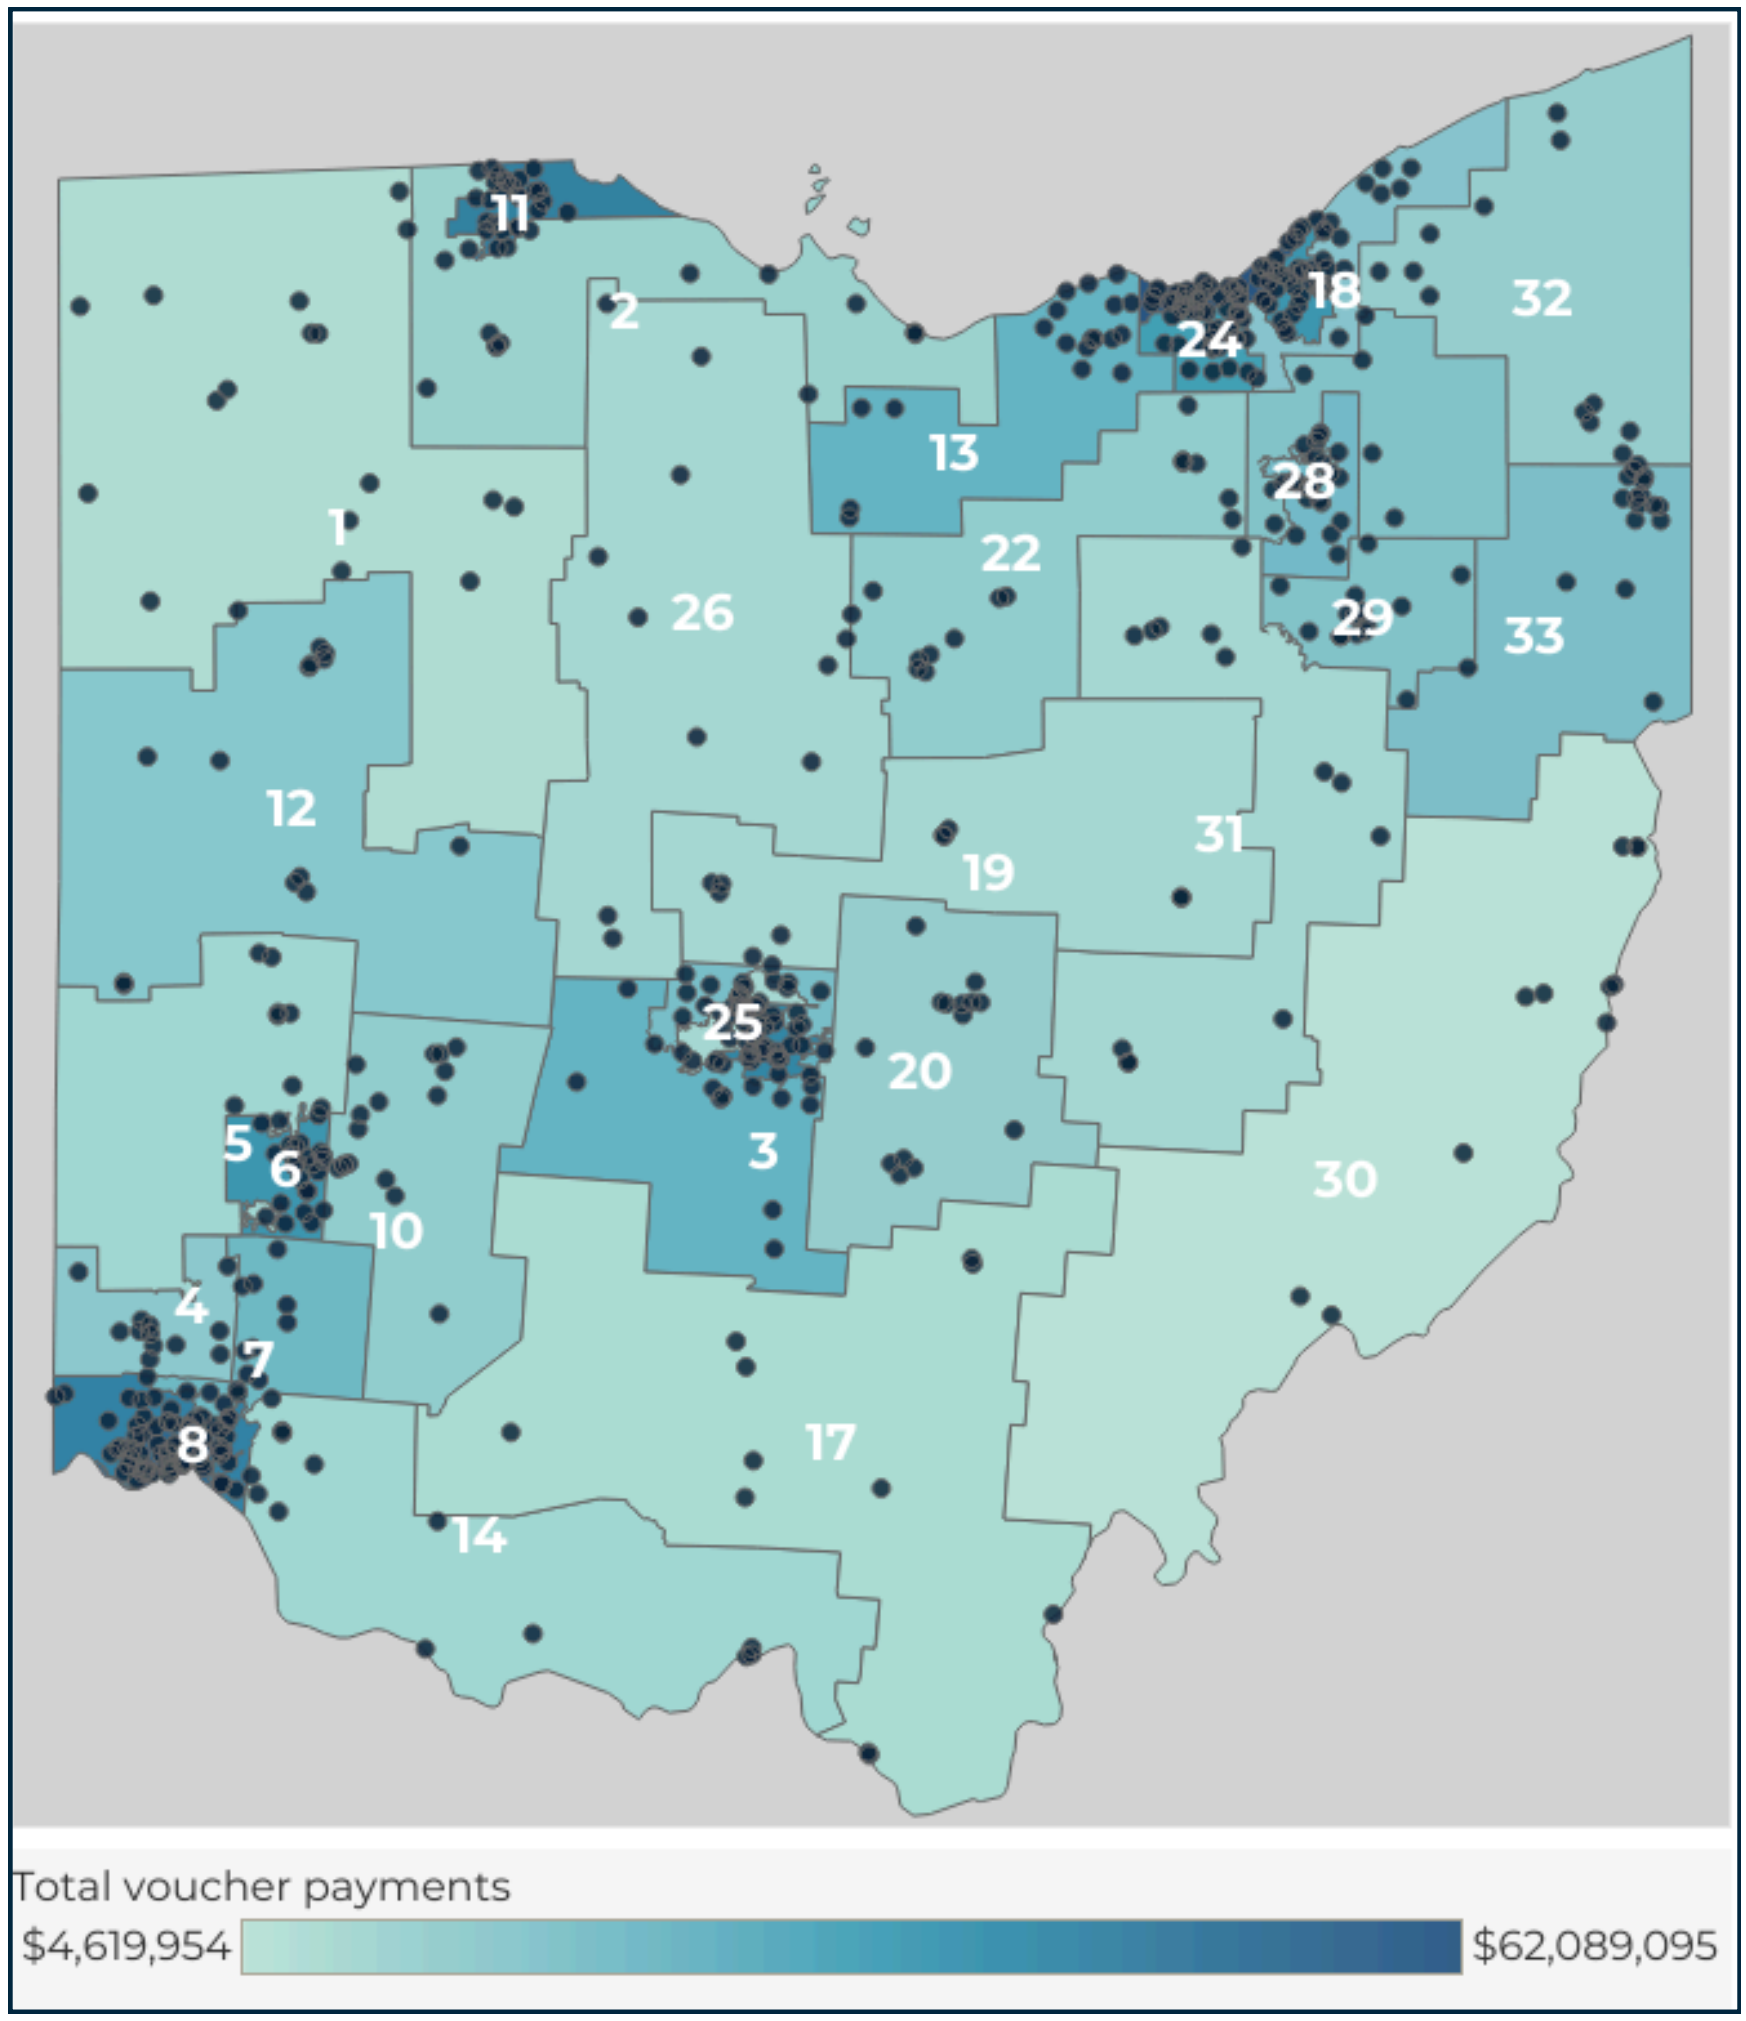

Email them at wilson@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-9737

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 8

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 8 there are

29

private voucher schools attended by 9,885

voucher students.

In District 8 there are

75

public schools attended by 45,644

students.

Contact Senator Blessing and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

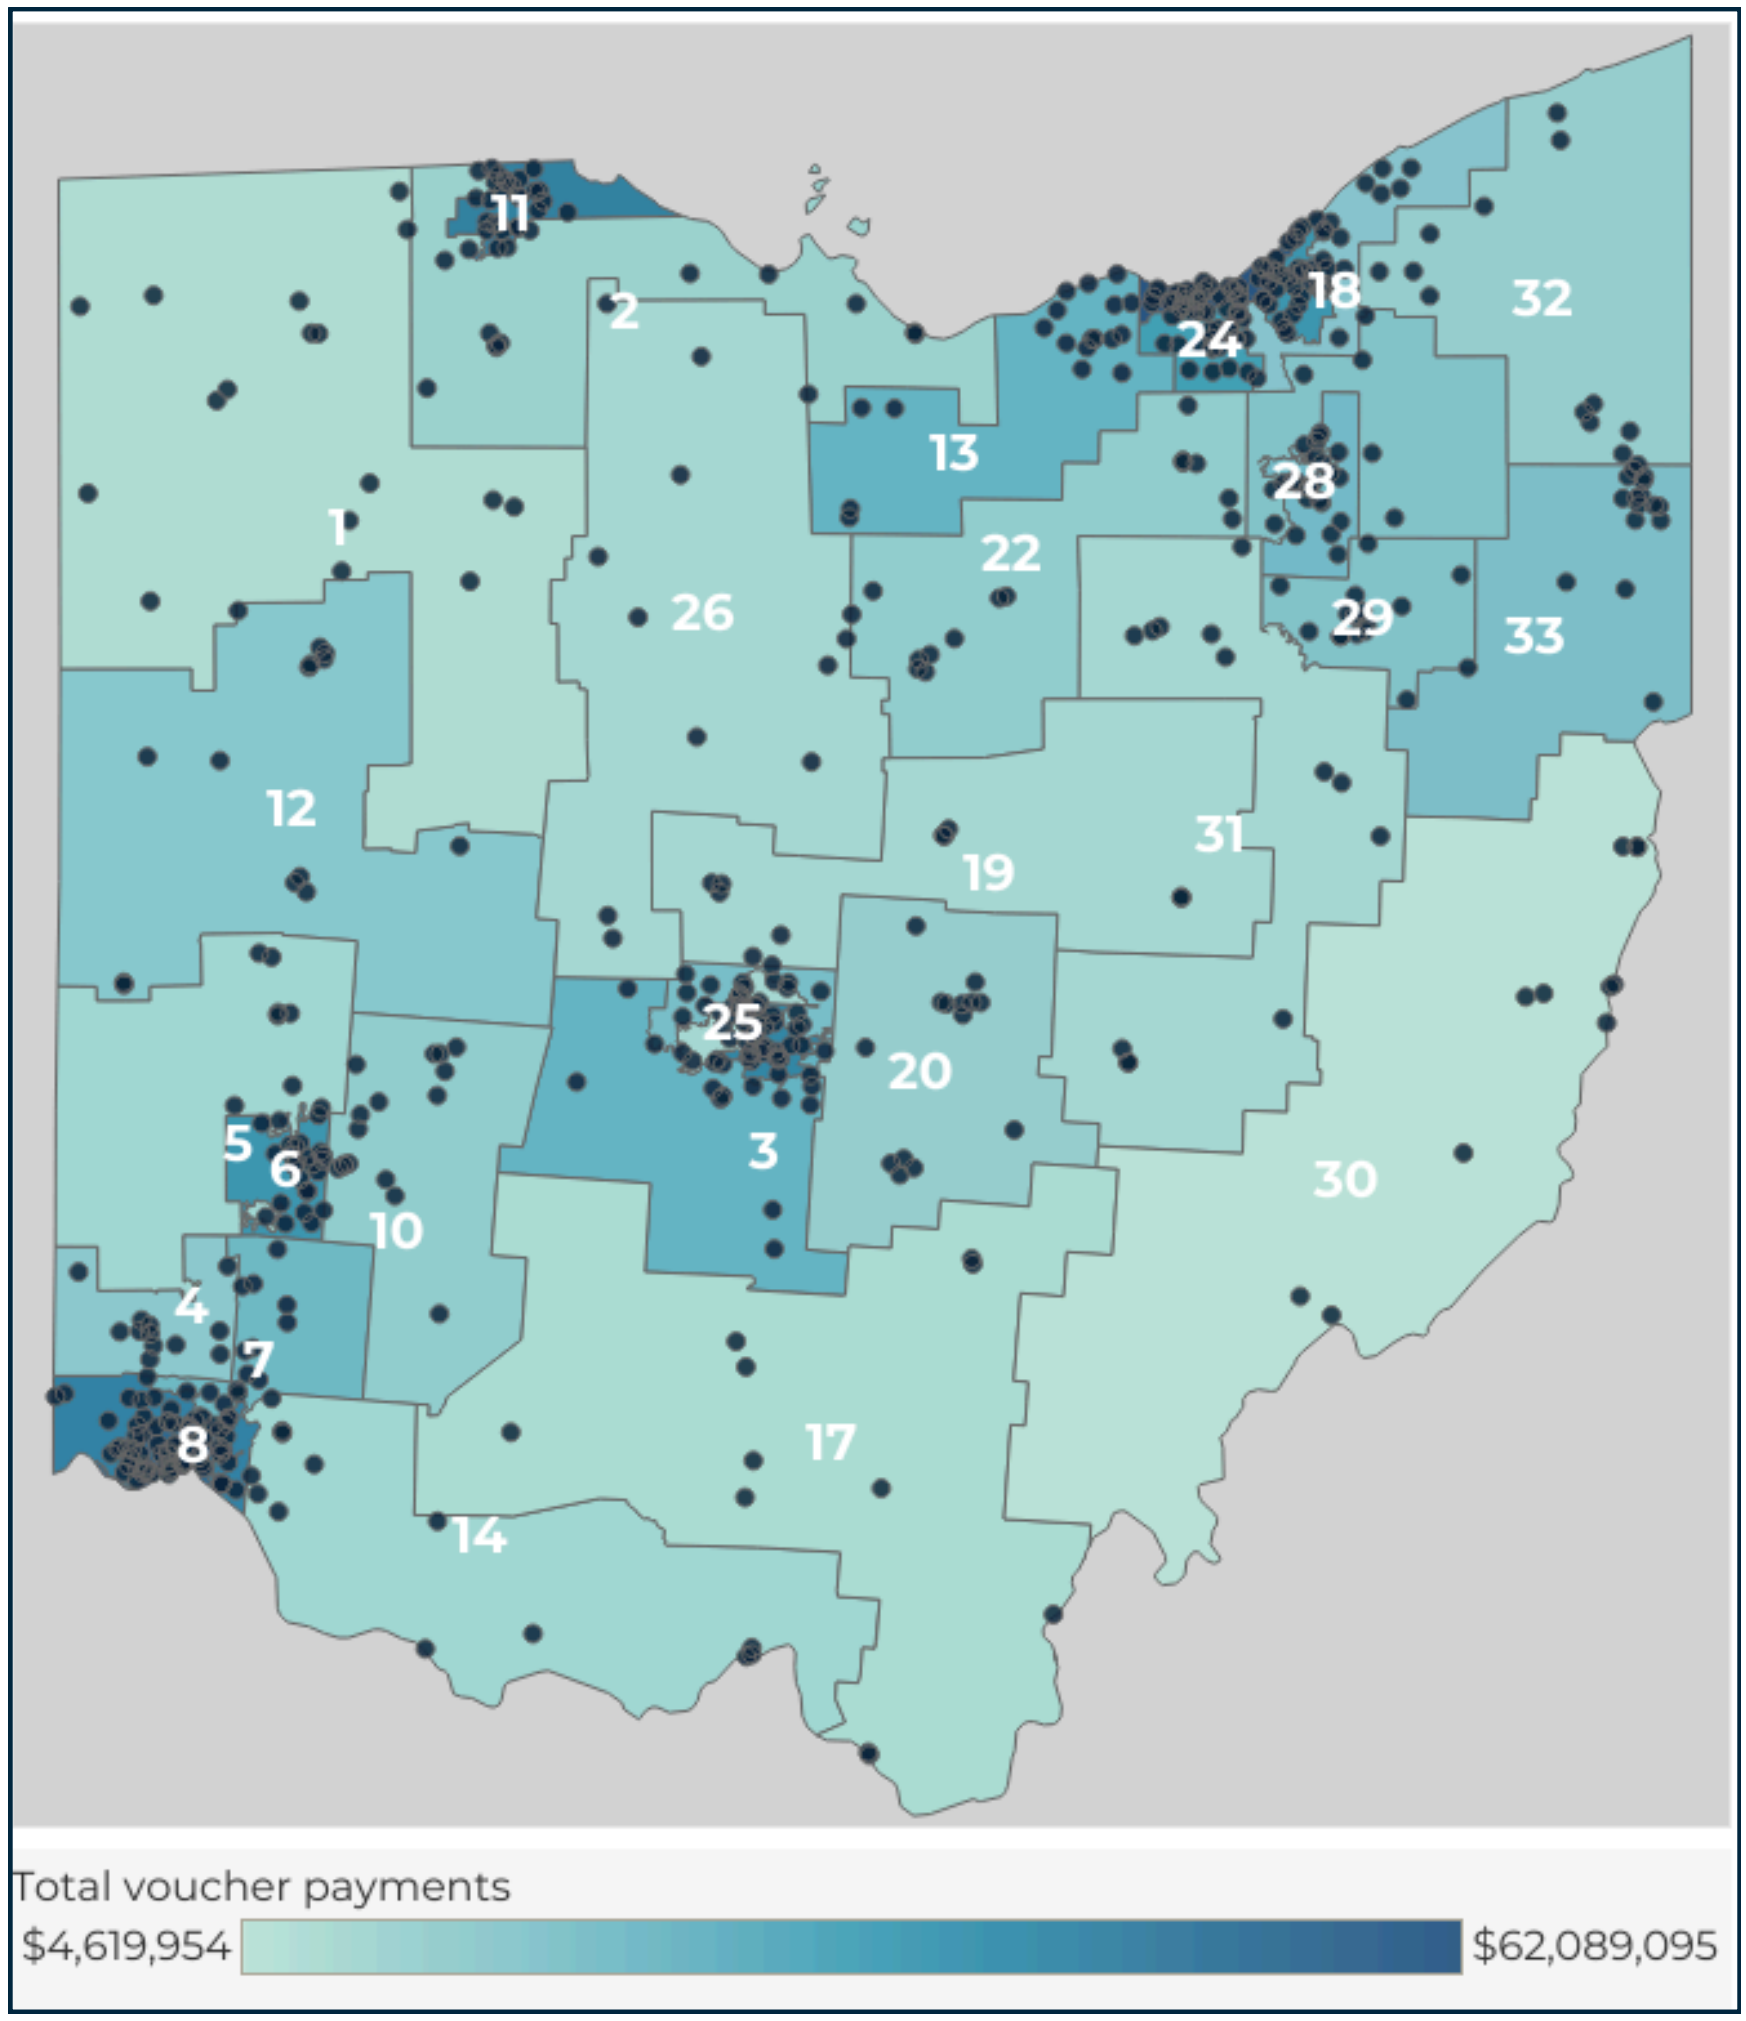

Email them at blessing@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-8068

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org

Mapping vouchers in Ohio

Vouchers use public dollars to pay private school tuition. Private schools can reject students with disabilities or behavior issues, or if they don't do well academically. They don't operate transparently like public schools do and aren't held accountable like public schools.

Private schools are concentrated mostly in Ohio's metro areas, siphoning public funds that should go to public schools from smaller cities and rural areas in particular.

Schools that accept EdChoice, EdChoice Expansion or the Cleveland voucher by Ohio Senate district

SENATE DISTRICT 9

Policy Matters Ohio

For the 2023-24 school year, state legislators made the EdChoice Expansion voucher available to any family, regardless of their income or whether their kids already attended private schools. As a result, Ohio gave out nearly 69,000 new EdChoice vouchers, while private school enrollment increased by fewer than 3,000 students. That same year, only 17% of EdChoice users qualified as low-income, compared to 68% the year before.

In District 9 there are 40

private voucher schools attended by 9,378

voucher students.

In District 9 there are

69

public schools attended by 35,157

students.

Contact Senator Ingram and tell them to make sure the state budget being negotiated in Columbus fully funds the public schools that educate the majority of Ohio's kids.

Email them at ingram@ohiosenate.gov
or call them at 614-466-5980

Questions? Contact Piet van Lier at pvanlier@policymattersohio.org